Los Angeles Is Isolated by Flood; 144 Feared Dead

20,000 Are Homeless as Rain Continues, Waters Rise.

Mountain Snows Increase Menace

Pilot Tells Vivid Story of Flying Refugees to Safety.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, March 3.—Southern California's toll of dead and missing in the flood disaster reached 144 today as paralyzed Los Angeles struggled to restore public services and survey the full loss from a record-breaking storm.

Accounts of life and property losses swelled spasmodically as flickers of life came here and there to the demoralized communication systems of 100 stricken communities.

The homeless were estimated at nearly 20,000 in the five affected counties—Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino and Ventura.

All was silent in the delta land of the wildest river of the flood—the Santa Ana.

Muddy Lagoon.

The last ten miles of its drainage area, one of the most productive regions agriculturally in the United States, was a muddy lagoon.

There was no means of telling what the life loss there might have been.

Water which flooded streets in downtown and industrial Los Angeles gradually receded and rolled down upon the lowlands which caught the climax of the high water during the day.

The weather cleared gradually, allowing the departure and arrival of airliners and a limited restoration of communications after several hours of virtual isolation.

City Is Isolated.

The metropolis of more than 2,000,000 population was all but cut off from the outside world during most of the day. Long-distance telephone lines were out of commission, telephone service within the city was disorganized, telegraph lines were down, highways blocked and rail lines stymied.

Ten persons, the first to leave the stricken city, reached San Francisco on a United Airlines plane, which also carried pictures for Associated Press Wirephoto distribution to the rest of the country.

Those arriving in San Francisco told vivid stories of flood rescues and of houses tumbling down hills.

Coldest Weather Of '38 Due Here After Snowfall

District residents who hopefully practiced the "Spring Song" last week spent yesterday brushing up on "Jingle Bells," as rain, sleet and snow brought expectations of the coldest weather of the year.

Last night's prediction was that the temperature would drop early to 8 degrees, lowest point since February, 1936. A brief cold wave, accompanied by fair skies, was forecast as the mercury steadily fell yesterday from 51 at 9 a. m. to 27 at 6:30 p. m.

Yesterday's snow, accompanied by "fresh to strong" north winds, fell to a depth of about an inch.

Roosevelt Renews His Stand For Pay-Floor, Hour-Ceiling

President, in Letter to Miss Perkins on the 25th Anniversary of Her Department, Asserts Such Standards Are Needed.

President Roosevelt, in a message to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins on the occasion of the Labor Department's twenty-fifth anniversary, last night reiterated that there must be a "floor to wages and ceiling to hours."

Miss Perkins read the message to more than 1,200 persons attending the anniversary dinner at the Mayflower Hotel. The letter said:

"Will you please extend my warm greetings to the many friends of labor who are joining tonight and tomorrow in the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the United States Department of Labor?

"The quarter of a century that has passed since it came into being has been marked by significant changes in our conceptions of the rights of wage earners. Today there is general recognition that there should be a floor to wages and a ceiling to hours; that there should

Federal Report Urges 500 More Gallinger Beds

By Gerald G. Gross

Making a wide range of recommendations, from drastic reform of the lunacy laws to demolition of the present children's ward at Gallinger Hospital, the U. S. Public Health Service report on Washington's health problems was made public yesterday.

The exhaustive study, representing two months of leg work and another month of drafting, was presented to Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen by Surgeon General Thomas Parran and Dr. Robert Olesen, Assistant Surgeon General, who had charge of the investigation.

Still in typewritten form—no funds are available for printing—the report deplores overcrowding at Gallinger Hospital, urges the addition of 850 municipal hospital beds and points out that, for all all its high morbidity rates, "Washington is a good place in which to live."

While making the findings public, Commissioner Hazen nevertheless withheld comment pending the return to Washington of Commissioner George E. Allen, who is on vacation. Allen has general supervision of the District's public health and welfare affairs.

"The likelihood that expenditures for construction of expensive hospitals and asylums for the terminal care of victims of preventable diseases undoubtedly can be reduced by early preventive measures is a potent argument for the changes that are recommended in

$1,113,546,000 Navy Bill Wins In Committee

Plan Giving U. S. Greatest Armada Afloat Goes to House Floor.

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt's $1,113,546,000 naval expansion bill was reported favorably to the House yesterday with a "policy" amendment which committed the Administration to ultimate establishment of the greatest fighting armada afloat.

The measure, approved 20 to 3 by the House Naval Affairs Committee, calls for 3 super-dreadnaughts, 2 aircraft carriers, 9 cruisers, 23 destroyers, 9 submarines, 5 destroyer tenders, 3 submarine tenders, 11 seaplane tenders, 3 repair ships and 950 planes.

In addition, it authorizes $8,000,000 for repair of shipyards and earmarks $30,000,000 for "experimentation." This embraces acquisition of strategic inventions, construction of small "mystery ships"—apparently high-powered, torpedo-carrying motor boats—and construction of a $3,000,000 dirigible.

The bill is expected to be called up next week. Chairman Carl Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, said that on Tuesday he would ask for a 12-hour debate limit, after which the measure would be open to amendment. He added he would file a report tomorrow emphasizing that the program was purely for defensive purpose and "not to police the world" as foes charged.

The program calls for building the Navy 20 per cent above limits of the defunct London Navy Treaty and supplements the Vinson-Trammell act, authorizing 119 vessels now under construction or planned.

Schools Inculcating Stupidity, Human Resource Parley Told

In an announced effort "to look at a hot world with cool heads," the conference on the Conservation and Development of Human Resources, at the first sessions of a three-day meeting, heard here yesterday that:

Schools develop artificial stupidity and build up a natural antagonism to real learning. (Dr. William H. Kilpatrick, white-haired professor of Teachers College, Columbia University, said this.)

The world would be a much better place in which to live if young men and women would stop making "grandiose efforts for international peace and other vast achievements" and spend their lives trying to do something to improve the small communities in which they live. (This from Dr. A. E. Morgan, chairman of the TVA.)

Approximately 1,000,000 children are being born each year to American families on relief or with incomes of less than $1,000. Senate Given $48,156,328 D. C. Budget

Vote Is Expected Today on Increased Fund, 'Paper' Deficit.

$400,000 for Reservoir at Soldiers' Home Is Added to Bill.

By James D. Secrest.

A District supply bill totaling $48,156,328 was reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee yesterday carrying a "paper" deficit of approximately $4,700,000. The Senate will vote on it today.

A last-minute decision to utilize the surplus in the highway fund and the unexpected addition of a supplemental estimate of $400,000 for the construction of a reservoir on the Soldiers' Home grounds accounted for the jump of more than $900,000 above the total anticipated Wednesday.

The additions do not change the estimated deficit, however, as they are not chargeable to the general revenue account.

$4,700,000 Deficit.

While the bookkeeping deficit, on the basis of calculations by the Budget Bureau and the House Appropriations Committee, is about $4,000,000, District officials predict that another $700,000 must be added as the business privilege tax collections will fall that far short of the expected $3,000,000.

Chairman Nichols, of the House sub-committee on fiscal affairs, stated that the doubling of the anticipated deficit would complicate the job of revising the tax bill as he called a meeting of his sub-committee for Monday.

While still adhering to the program of an income levy, a $1.60 realty tax, and a beer levy, Nichols said that the problem was further complicated by the fact that the intangible personal property tax, which now raises $2,300,000 would have to be repealed or credited if an income tax law were enacted.

100 More Police Asked.

"That looks like we are going to have to have mighty high income tax rates," he said.

The Senate sub-committee added 50 new policemen, including six officers, to man the old second precinct station when it is reopened, it was disclosed with the filing of the report.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, the chairman, said that Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, when called into special conference had asked for 100 men, and Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, had moved that they be allowed.

Senator Glass, chairman of the full committee, however, proposed that the number be cut in half, and the sub-committee agreed.

Thomas said that some of the

Miss Garbo Milks While Stokowski Holds Cow's Head

Ravello, Italy, March 3 (U.P.).—A cow named Emma enjoyed the attention of Greta Garbo today while she dodged newspaper reporters at the Villa Cimbrone, where she and Leopold Stokowski are spending their vacation.

Emma, a dun-colored animal, was being milked in regular routine when Miss Garbo and her friend strolled into the barnyard. She stroked the cow's nose, murmured a few Swedish endearments, and sat down on the stool, while Stokowski held the cow's head.

The only other incident of note was the visit of a village cobbler who repaired one of Miss Garbo's shoes. It was size seven and a half.

Bureau Foes Blacklisted, Senators Say

King, Bailey Aver Votes Brought Threat of Patronage Loss.

Reorganization Is Called Way to Put Politics Into Relief.

By Robert C. Albright.

Blacklisting of Senators by bureau officials and an organized effort to "destroy" the powers of Congress, yesterday were charged by Democratic opponents of the Administration's Government reorganization bill.

"This is the hour, this is the opportunity, this is the crucial moment when we must strike or be struck down," Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, solemnly informed his colleagues.

Assailing the pending measure as a means of taking over Congressional control of spending and policy-making powers, and permanently injecting "politics" in relief, Bailey said Congress would be "told about the horse ten months after it was stolen."

Patronage Used As Club.

Then Bailey and Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, charged "arrogant" bureau officials have advised them they have not voted "right" and can have no say in Government appointments.

Bailey said his secretary recently wrote a letter of indorsement for a job applicant. Later his secretary called "the chief counsel for the department" on the telephone and asked that the man be "considered favorably."

"I am utterly astonished that your office should ask anything from us," Bailey said the official replied.

"We will not tolerate that arrogance," Bailey shouted. King interrupted to present what he said was a "stronger case."

"I voted against a measure which was brought before the Senate," King said. "I learned that a department in carrying out the provision of that measure was employing a large number of persons. I went to the department, not to ask for an appointment but to protest against such a large number of appointments.

On the Blacklist.

"'You are on the blacklist,'" King said an official of the agency told him. "'You voted against the bill which created this department and other Senators who voted against the bill are also on the blacklist.'

"That represents the arrogance of the officials of these bureaus which we are creating."

Neither Bailey nor King named the officials on the floor or later to reporters. But Bailey told the Senate:

"I think the time has come for

Mother Will Give Right Eye So Her Baby, 2, Can See

Lansdale, Pa., Mar. 3 (AP).—A 30-year-old mother said tonight she had arranged to give her right eye that her baby son might see.

Mrs. William Laverty, wife of a textile worker, made plans to go to New York for the operation March 28 at the Presbyterian Medical Center.

The curly-haired baby, Roger, will be 2 years old tomorrow. His mother said he won a health contest in competition with 1,200 children a year ago at Providence, R. I., where the Lavertys formerly lived.

Doctors told the mother the child had been losing his sight since he became ill with measles last April. His right eye is sightless and the left is affected.

Mrs. Laverty said she and her husband "talked the matter over" and decided on the operation. She said she was told if her right eye was transferred to the child, his sight would be restored and the loss of vision in the left eye might be checked.

Pershing Gaining, Physician Reports

Tucson, Ariz., March 3 (AP).—Gen. John J. Pershing "made satisfactory progress today," Dr. Roland Davison said in a bulletin tonight.

"Blood examinations showed further reduction of uremic poisoning and his strength was definitely improved. The condition of his heart still gives us some concern, but at present it is apparently meeting the demands made upon it.

"He is much more alert. He wanted to know why he couldn't get any newspapers to read."

Within the space of 26 hours ending this afternoon, an Oriental potentate, a titled ambassador and three royal princesses will have dropped in on Franklin Delano Roosevelt, to whom such a succession of notables is all in a day's work.

In any other American household, a similar occurrence would constitute a social event of transcendent importance, if not an entire social season, but at the White House they said last night:

"We take it in our stride."

"We try to keep things fit for a sovereign at all times," crisply observed one of the White House ushers, unmoved by the fact that this was the first time in many years members of two royal families have crowded each other so closely on official visits to the Capital.

First to arrive was His Highness Said bin Taimur bin Faisal, the diminutive ruler of the diminutive sultanate of Muscat and Oman. The

Two Senators Urge TVA Quiz On 23 Charges

By Franklyn Waltman.

Determined demands for a sweeping Congressional investigation into the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority were made yesterday on Capitol Hill as a result of the assault made Wednesday night by TVA Chairman Arthur E. Morgan on his two fellow directors.

Senators William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, and H. Styles Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, joined in a nonpartisan effort to secure such an investigation by a special Senate committee. At the same time they propounded 23 charges made against the TVA, which they contended should be examined in the proposed investigation. These charges went far beyond the subject covered by Chairman Morgan in his lengthy statement Wednesday night.

Republican Leader Bertrand H. Snell in the House likewise demanded an investigation into the Morgan contentions, while a similar demand came from Representative Maury Maverick, a leader of the Democratic left-wing. Other House members indorsed the demands for an investigation, but the prospect of any action in the House appeared slight after Speaker William B. Bankhead asserted that no consideration was being given to such an inquiry "by any of us in a position of responsibility."

Profit Tax Foes To Ask Redraft By Committee

Bi-Partisan House Group Will Move for Complete Repeal of Levy.

An effort to send the Administration's tax-revision bill back to committee for complete repeal of the undivided profits tax and elimination of penalties on "closely held" corporations last night was discussed by Republican and Democratic opponents of the measure.

Bipartisan opposition centered on these two features as the bill moved through its first stormy day of debate in the House.

Members who have been waiting more than three months for the business tax modification measure heard Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, argue that it will distribute tax burdens more fairly and encourage business activity.

Then it heard Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking Republican committee member, charge "the Administration is seeking to force another unsound tax measure upon the country, purely for the purpose of saving political face."

Meanwhile, the man who had more to do with preparation of the measure than any other member of the House—Representative Fred M. Vinson (Democrat), of Kentucky—staunchly defended the undivided profits tax principle and proposed penalties on companies controlled by a few individuals.

"I am not ashamed of the vote I cast for the 1936 revenue act (carrying the present undivided profits tax law)," Vinson insisted. "No one else needs to be ashamed."

Not until next week will the House start voting on amendments

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, March 3.—Nicholas N. Krestinsky, the lone holdout in Russia's mass treason trial, today forlornly joined his 20 co-defendants in confessing to plots against the Soviet state from its birth.

Krestinsky, once Soviet ambassador to Berlin but now only a haggard shell of a man had cried his innocence yesterday, repudiating his confession before trial.

But today, in the second dramatic episode of the two-day-old trial, he unexpectedly changed his plea after Prosecutor Andrei J. Vishinsky had stopped the examination of other defendants to bring testimony to bear on him.

Then the prosecutor turned to the one-time diplomat:

"Do you persist in deceiving the court?"

"Yesterday," Krestinsky answered abjectly, "under the false shame impressed by my position in the dock and due to illness I am suffering, I said I was not guilty instead of guilty.

"I now plead completely guilty of all crimes of which I am accused."

Those crimes included such treasonable dealings with the late German Gen. Hans von Seeckt as organizing a spy ring and preparing

British Seek 4-Power Pact With France, Italy, Reich

'Double-Barreled' Deal With Hitler, Il Duce, Chamberlain's Aim.

$565,000,000 Budget; Army Figures Highest in Sixteen Years.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 3.—Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, trying to keep peace in a Europe arming for war, today sought to make a double-barreled deal with Fuehrer Hitler of Germany and Premier Mussolini of Italy.

Chamberlain's policy of dickering with dictators took its new exploratory turn when Sir Neville Henderson, British Ambassador to Berlin, saw Hitler and Joachim von Ribbentrop, new German foreign minister.

The turn toward friendship came as Britain was steeling herself for the announcement in the House of Commons tomorrow of the navy's share of the nation's huge arms budget. Of the total estimated $1,758,750,000 for armament in 1938, the navy was expected to get $565,000,000.

Highest in 16 Years.

The army estimates submitted to Commons today were the highest in 16 years. They totaled $532,500,000, an increase of $121,630,000 over last year. This came on top of a previously announced $557,510,000 gross air force estimate and $101,380,000 for ordnance factories.

Terse official announcements in both London and Berlin said only that the conversation concerned "subjects of interest to both countries."

But it was considered certain that Henderson and Hitler covered, among other things, the vital question of German demands for colonies and German aims toward Austria and Czechoslovakia, whose Nazi populations are agitating for union with the Third Reich.

Four-Power Accord Sought.

Despite the official reticence, diplomatic quarters were agreed Chamberlain was trying to revive the Locarno Treaty which his late half-brother, Sir Austen, built and Hitler destroyed by reoccupying the Rhineland March 7, 1936.

Today's move made it increasingly clear Chamberlain was trying to bring Italy and Germany into a four-power accord with Britain and France—a pact similar to that the four powers and Belgium signed at Locarno in 1925 guaranteeing the peace of western Europe.

Even as the Berlin conversations signaled the opening of sweeping Anglo-German negotiations, the Earl of Perth prepared to return Saturday to his post as Ambassador to Rome for the parallel conversations with Italy.

France has been kept informed of Britain's preliminary steps toward the four-power pact and has indicated her willingness to follow the British lead into any system guaranteeing the peace of western Europe.

To Continue Pressure.

At almost the same time the talks were being held in Berlin, diplomatic sources disclosed German Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering had told the French Ambassador ten days ago that German pressure on Austria would continue.

Goering was said to have predicted further developments in the near future in the Austrian situation, already tense from Nazi efforts to get control of the government.

Unless Britain was prepared to make specific colonial contributions it was considered doubtful that Germany would be willing to negotiate.

Civil Liberties Violation Laid To La Follette

Counsel Scores Retention of Manufacturers' Head Under Subpena.

By the United Press.

Chairman Robert M. La Follette, Jr. (Progressive), of Wisconsin, and members of his Senate Civil Liberties Committee yesterday were charged with violating the civil rights of Charles R. Hook, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, during a stormy hearing into the N. A. M.'s activities.

The clash, culminating a series of accusations and counter-charges, came after La Follette announced that Hook and Ernest T. Weir—two of the nation's foremost industrialists and N. A. M. officials—were excused after brief testimony but would remain under subpena.

John C. Gall, N. A. M. counsel, challenged the chairman's ruling.

"We feel that the calling of witnesses and keeping them under subpena is in itself a violation of civil liberties," he said. "We protest."

Hook, head of American Rolling Mills, Inc., and Weir, chairman of the National Steel Corporation and the N. A. M.'s educational committee, had testified before the Senate group regarding the association's publicity activities.

Visibly angered by Gall's charges, La Follette said the lawyer had shown no desire to co-operate, and adjourned the hearing until today after Walter Weisenburger, N. A. M. executive vice president, pleaded that the association "doesn't want" Gall's statement to stand.

Weisenburger said the N. A. M. appreciated the "attitude of the committee." La Follette, who previously had said the committee had delayed its hearings in order to accommodate Weir and Hook, snapped:

"You choose a fine way to show it."

Earlier, Weir testified there was a "general anti-industrial movement" in the United States, participated in by newspapers and other groups he refused to identify. He defended the N. A. M.'s educational campaign as "necessary" to cope with the anti-business drive.

Berry Welcomes TVA Inquiry; Will Appeal on Marble

Knoxville, Tenn., March 3 (AP).—Senator George L. Berry (Democrat), of Tennessee, said today he "would welcome a full and complete investigation of the TVA from A to Z."

"And especially would I welcome an investigation of my relationship with the TVA," Berry added, "because I am exceedingly interested to know if an arm of the Government can confiscate the property of a tax-paying citizen without due process of law as guaranteed by the Constitution."

The junior Tennessee Senator commented after authorizing his attorney, Leslie Morris, to appeal a Federal commission's ruling that Berry's marble holdings in the Norris Dam reservoir are commercially worthless.

Morris said the case would be taken to a three-member Federal court appointed by the Sixth United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

More Relief Here Opposed by Lusk

Opposing any increase in District relief appropriations, Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, predicted yesterday at a meeting in the Cosmopolitan Club, that the city's relief rolls will rise to an all-time peak before the end of March.

"Those who propose more expenditure for relief really argue that it is necessary to take care of more people when times are good—they are still good in Washington—than during the bottom of the depression four years ago," Lusk said.

The proposed boost of $2,347,000 for additional relief for employes, according to Lusk, would add at least 6,000 cases to the rolls. "Allowing two and one half persons to a case, then 75,000 individuals would be receiving relief, or over 12 per cent of the entire population of the District."

Dahlgren Citizens Association Considers Taxes Major Concern

FRANCIS J. McDONALD.

Budget Not Exceeding $46,000,000, Reduction in Real Estate Levy to $1.50 Is Favored by F. J. McDonald, President.

By Christine Sadler.

Taxation is the major concern of members of the Dahlgren Citizens Association. Since 95 per cent of all residents serviced by the organization are property owners living in their own homes, and real estate taxes bear the brunt of government costs in the District, this interest is a natural one, believes Francis J. McDonald, the association's president.

"We favor a budget not to exceed $46,000,000 and a reduction in real estate taxes from the present $1.75 to $1.50, rather than to the proposed $1.60," he said. "We believe this reduction could be made without increasing the budget, especially if findings of the Prettyman report were followed through."

McDonald does not believe the Prettyman report went far enough and thinks the need for its completion to include all phases of the District government—or some other complete study—is pressing.

"We believe that some formula for theb udget should be worked out, and that the annual appropriation should not be a debatable matter," he declared.

The Jacobs report was complete enough in his opinion, but was written from the "city manager viewpoint" and without citizen cooperation.

"Whatever study is made should be participated in by a citizenship group," he said. "We feel that the $5,000,000 contributed by the Federal Government to District expenses is wholly unfair, but would be willing to see the percentage set at whatever a fair study of the situation showed necessary."

The association was opposed to the business privilege tax even before it became a law, and still is. It also thinks the present inheritance law should be amended, so as to grant widows and minors a greater exemption. A more stringent enforcement of the personal property tax law would yield better returns, it believes.

The questions of sales tax and income tax have not been voted on by the group, because of its belief that expenses of the Government can be reduced to the point where no additional taxes will be necessary and the real estate tax reduced.

"Until we know the workings of the District government and the cause for its many overlappings and split authorities, we will continue to have that opinion," McDonald declared.

He said he felt about adequate relief for the District as he did about budget appropriations—it should not be a debatable question.

"I have no objection to a $5,000 study of the relief situation if citizens are permitted to aid with the study," he asserted. "I would like especially to see why administrative costs are so high."

McDonald is in the technical control division of the old-age insurance section of the Social Security Board. Before taking this job he was with the Veterans' Administration. He is a native of New Hampshire and has lived in the District 15 years. He did not become interested in joining a citizens' association, however, until three years ago, when the tax situation and the District's fiscal administration policy began to irk him. He has no desire to vote in the District, but if those who call themselves citizens want the vote he believes they should have it.

The association is 18 years old and has 150 members. It was founded by Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Kingsbury, who still are members. Kingsbury is treasurer. A. F. E. Scheer, president of the Northeast Federation of Citizens Association also belongs to the Dahlgren Terrace group.

On Monday George E. Miller, president of the Metropolis View Citizens Association, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

members of Congress to assert their power in order that it may be understood, particularly in these departments, that the power is ours and not theirs and the responsibility for the Government and its policies are upon the elective and the Constitutional representatives of the people."

The tall North Carolina Democrat declared the reorganization bill would give a single man "imperial powers" over 565,000 civil service employes, remove money control from Congress, and, finally, endanger "free elections" by concentrating welfare activities under a single department.

He estimated $2,500,000,000, or more than one-fourth of all annual Federal expenditures, would be in the hands of the proposed new Department of Welfare.

"If we give a department $2,500,000,000, if we let its rolls rise to 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 Americans dependent upon it, and it is headed by a Cabinet officer appointed by the President, he is in politics no matter how good your President is," said Bailey.

"If we put him there, our last chance to take relief from politics is gone forever.

"I sometimes think if that happens, the last chance to have a free election in America will be gone. And I am saying in all solemnity, we cannot have free elections in America with 2,000,000, or 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 American voters receiving money from the Administration in power. People are not capable of that, either at one end or the other, and we might as well know it."

Discussing King's "blacklisting" charges, Bailey said he questioned whether the Utahan would be allowed "to go in and out of the door" of a department if the reorganization bill passes.

"I will despise their reprisals," said Bailey. "I will put them in their places. If an official has a job which is worth nothing to the American people, his job ought to be taken away from him and his salary along with it."

The North Carolina Senator criticized reorganization bill proposals for a single Civil Service administrator as "the beginning of the end" of the civil service principle, then launched into an attack on proposals to abolish the Comptroller General's office and divide his duties between the budget director and a new auditor general, with post audit powers. He denied assertions by Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, that only 3½ per cent of all accounts are now handled by the comptroller. He said that dealt only with the cases "submitted by question."

"Every warrant on the Treasury must be signed by the comptroller of accounts," he insisted. "Not a dollar goes out unless he passes upon it when he signs the warrant.

"The General Accounting Office is our office. It is the agent of Congress. What are we asked to do? We are asked to give all of that up and turn it over to a general auditor who will report to us a year after the money is spent.

"Our power to check, our power to hold to account is to be thrown overboard in order that those who get the money may spend it for such purposes as they choose and we find out about it after the money is spent."

Strike to Come At Baltimore, Bridges Asserts

Cut in Wages Violates Agreement, Western C. I. O. Chief Says.

By the Associated Press.

Harry Bridges, maritime labor leader, said yesterday a strike would be called at Baltimore unless the Merchant & Miners Steamship Line restored a 15-cents-an-hour pay cut given longshoremen.

The Pacific Coast C. I. O. chieftain discussed the Baltimore situation at a press conference.

"If we have anything to do about it, they (the Baltimore longshoremen) won't work," Bridges said after predicting that other steamship lines would follow the Merchants & Miners line in reducing hourly pay from 95 to 80 cents.

Bridges was in Baltimore last week-end, and said he expected to return within a few days.

The reduction, Bridges said, was a violation of an agreement between the shipowners and the International Longshoremen's Association (A. F. of L.). Bridges said, but Joseph P. Ryan, president of the A. F. of L. union, agreed to the cut.

Bridges said his longshoremen's union was not established in Baltimore, but "we help workers out, no matter what union they belong to."

Bridges' press conference was called primarily to issue a statement attacking chairman Copeland (Democrat), of the Senate Commerce Committee for refusing to let him testify before the committee.

Copeland said Bridges could not testify on proposed amendments to the marine act, restricting the right of seamen to strike, until the Labor Department completes an investigation to see whether the Pacific Coast union official should be deported.

Richberg Makes Plea for Business Self-Government

New York, March 3 (U.P.).—Donald R. Richberg, former NRA Administrator and adviser to President Roosevelt, tonight reiterated his plea for industrial self-government rather than Federal regulation of business to increase production, better wages and lower prices.

Addressing the annual dinner of the drug and chemical section of the New York Board of Trade, he again urged as an immediate forward step the permanent establishment of a bureau of industrial economics in the Department of Commerce.

Richberg said he agreed in part with the testimony of Bernard Baruch, New York financier and New Deal adviser, before the Senate Unemployment Committee that the "single missing element in a great forward movement is a feeling of security."

D.C. Jobless Urged To Get WPA Work

Unemployed persons able and willing to work and in need of relief were urged yesterday, by the Citizens Committee on Unemployment and Relief to apply for certification for employment at the District WPA quarters.

"It is no longer necessary to have been on relief in order to be eligible for a WPA job," spokesman for the committee stated.

This statement was made yesterday in conjunction with the recent statement by Otto Cass, WPA administrator, that 2,000 more jobs were to be made available in the District.

The Gallup Poll

United States Sentiment for Disarmament Drops Sharply Since 1937.

By Dr. George Gallup.

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, March 3.—In a surprise move which made front page headlines, the Japanese foreign minister, Koki Hirota, recently hinted that Japan was hopeful of putting a stop to the world-wide naval building race through a new international disarmament plan.

George Gallup.

His trial balloon comes at a time when American public sentiment, as tested by the American Institute of Public Opinion, is growing increasingly cool toward disarmament pacts. With Congress debating a large increase in naval building, the Institute's studies find that public opinion has veered away from international arms limitation in a truly remarkable trend.

As recently as last June, for example, an overwhelming majority of voters—79 per cent—said they thought the United States should reduce expenditures for national defense if other nations did likewise. But today Institute studies find that sentiment for disarmament has dropped to the point where only about half of the voters favor a halt in our naval program if other nations agree to halt theirs.

The question put to a scientifically selected cross-section of voters in the latest survey was: "If other nations would sign a disarmament treaty with the United States would you favor giving up our plans to build a larger navy?"

The vote is: "yes" 52 per cent, "no" 48 per cent.

Skeptical of Treaties.

The reasons given by voters for their growing coolness toward disarmament pacts fall largely into two categories. The chief reason is a widespread distrust of treaty promises. More than half of voters who oppose arms agreements say that any pact made at this time would soon be broken by one of the signatories. The remarks of voters are full of such phrases as "treaties don't mean anything these days" and "look what happened to the other disarmament pacts."

The second reason mentioned is that, with growing world unrest, the United States needs a bigger navy anyhow.

Persons who, on the other hand, favor a new disarmament pact declare that only through reasonable agreements among leading nations can the peace of the world be maintained. But the survey found that those favoring disarmament treaties were not so intense in their feelings as those opposed. The proportion of those voting emphatically "no" was far greater than the proportion voting emphatically "yes."

Trend of Sentiment Favoring Disarmament Pacts.

Took Lead in 1922.

The new public attitude toward disarmament is particularly significant because the United States has in the past been a prime instigator of arms limitation. It called the Washington conference in 1922 which resulted in naval building agreements among the principle powers.

Now, 16 years later, the American public's faith in such treaties has noticeably waned. And even though a slight majority still favors some kind of disarmament agreement, there is opposition to having the United States take the lead as it did in 1922. This opposition was expressed in an Institute poll last June which found that while the majority felt the time was ripe for a new disarmament conference they did not think President Roosevelt should be the first to propose it to other world powers.

On Capitol Hill

Rep. Reyburn and Whittington Discuss Flood Control With President; to Prepare Bill.

Representatives Sam Rayburn, of Texas, House majority leader, and W. M. Whittington, of Mississippi, chairman of the Flood Control Committee, discussed with President Roosevelt yesterday a comprehensive flood control authorization bill.

Rayburn said he did not know how many projects would be included in the measure but that a bill would be worked out for passage at this session. He said work on the projects might range over a period of years and necessitate annual appropriations until finished.

• • • •

J. C. Hill, of Philadelphia, chief of the Pennsylvania Railroad's foreign transportation department, and Gustave Metzman, freight transportation manager for the New York Central lines, opposed before the House Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday a pending bill to limit freight trains to 70 cars. They said if the bill became law an economic loss both to railroads and to the general public would result.

• • • •

Almost simultaneously the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee heard Harry Wilson, vice chairman of the Railroad Traffic Executive Committee, and E. C. Plowman, freight traffic manager of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Corporation, advocate passage of the Pettengill bill to repeal the long and short haul clause of the I. C. C. act. Both said railroads wanted freedom from unnecessary restraint.

• • • •

The nomination of Adolph A. Berle, jr., former chamberlain of New York City, to be First Assistant Secretary of State was approved yesterday by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The Senate is expected to consider the nomination today.

• • • •

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, introduced a bill yesterday which would prevent the Federal Government from taxing the assets of closed banks which had been segregated for eventual payment to depositors. The bill incorporates the principles of several previously introduced by Representative Crawford (Republican), of Michigan, and would affect 223 banks in Michigan alone.

• • • •

A $28,089,027 appropriation bill to meet unexpected expenses of miscellaneous Government departments up to June 30 was passed by the House yesterday and sent to the White House.

• • • •

Establishment of a commission to study Federal Health Legislation and report to the 1939 Congress was proposed yesterday by Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York. He termed it the "next great step in social reform."

Roper Is Assailed By Small Business

Boston, March 3 (AP).—Challenging Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper's report to President Roosevelt that "self help" was "well nigh lacking in suggestions from smaller business men," Alfred C. Gaunt today described the statement as possibly "another major political blunder."

Gaunt, president of the association of smaller businesses of New England, wired the President that Roper's report showed "bureaucratic arrogance and complete failure to grasp the significance of the spirit of smaller business. . . ."

Indiana Society To Honor McNutt

The Indiana Society of Washington announced yesterday it will sponsor next Friday at the Wardman Park Hotel a reception and dance honoring Paul McNutt, and added that it "is not to be regarded as in any way political but only as a courtesy to a prominent son and former governor of the Hoosier State now in the spotlight."

Jackson Reflects 'Totalitarianism,' Sen. Austin Says

By the Associated Press.

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, told the Senate yesterday Robert H. Jackson "presents to the Nation and the Senate a composite picture" of the administration program which he described as leaning toward authoritarianism and totalitarianism.

Austin opposed Senate confirmation of President Roosevelt's nomination of Jackson to be Solicitor General.

Austin, who began speaking when the nomination was called up Wednesday, criticized Jackson's advocacy of the court reform program which the Senate defeated.

Terming Jackson an "imaginary trust buster" Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, joined Austin in demanding that the nomination be rejected. The Senate recessed without reaching a final vote.

Parsons Is Late For Trial, Then Obtains Delay

Representative Was Busy on Revenue Bill, His Lawyer Claims.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

After he kept seven witnesses waiting for more than an hour and finally caused Judge Hobart Newman to reconvene his court following adjournment, Representative Claude V. Parsons (Democrat), of Illinois, was arraigned in traffic court yesterday and pleaded not guilty to charges of leaving after colliding and obtained a continuance until March 16.

Although the hearing was scheduled for 1:30 p. m., Parsons' attorney, Arch Shipe, insisted on a postponement to "properly prepare" his case.

"It was not my understanding we would go to trial today," said Shipe. "The Congressman is very busy working on the revenue bill. It was with a great deal of sacrifice that he appeared here today."

U. S. Witnesses on Hand.

"But I understand the Government has several out-of-town witnesses," responded Judge Newman.

"Yes," said Assistant Corporation Counsel George Neilson, in charge of the prosecution, "two men are from Cleveland. They are here and the Government is ready."

After several minutes spent in switching dates to satisfy both sides, Judge Newman granted the continuance and released Parsons to appear in court. Albert D. Nesbitt, Cleveland attorney, driver of the other car, pleaded not guilty to charges of pulling from the curb without a hand signal and was also released pending trial.

All Government witnesses were on hand at the scheduled time. Several efforts to locate Representative Parsons at the Capitol were made before he finally appeared shortly after 2:30 p. m.

Meanwhile, Judge Newman had finished his day's business in Traffic Court and adjourned. He remained in his chambers, however, and when the Illinois lawmaker arrived agreed to reconvene and hear testimony.

Not Trying to Dodge.

Several of the Government's witnesses were forced to leave their places of employment for the court appearance, they said.

"We are not trying to dodge anything," said Shipe in requesting the postponement, "we just want time to properly prepare our case and give the Congressman time to attend to the current press of official business."

Parsons was first charged more than a week ago. He was accused by Nesbitt and his sister, Margaret Ellis, 2603 Connecticut avenue northwest, of fleeing from the scene of an accident in front of the latter's home.

Witnesses who testified at an earlier preliminary hearing told of a wild chase through Rock Creek Park, with Nesbitt and his sister pursuing the Congressional car at speeds varying from 40 to 60 miles an hour.

At that time, Parsons admitted he left the accident scene without making known his identity, but said he did it to "avoid a street brawl."

$63,000 Pledged To Aid Symphony

National Symphony Orchestra campaign workers passed the $63,000 mark yesterday, as they continued their drive for a $103,000 sustaining fund for the symphony's next year's activities.

A report luncheon in the Carlton Hotel was featured by the announcement that two divisions of campaigners had gone over the top in making their quotas. Mrs. Charles Bittinger, chairman of the Orchestra Guild group, reported pledges totalling $2,412.25, representing 120.6 per cent of the group's quota of $2,000. The Navy committee, Mrs. Emma Scott Land and Mrs. William Robert Munroe, co-chairmen, reported the collection of $2,729.75 with an assigned quota of $2,700.

New Trial Plea Planned in Tax Violation Case

Produce Merchant's Lawyer Charges Errors Made in Guilt Ruling.

A motion for a new trial for Fairfax Oyster, local produce merchant and dairyman who was found guilty yesterday of violating the business privilege act, will be presented to Police Court Judge Edward M. Curran before next Thursday, Attorney Dorsey K. Offutt stated yesterday.

The attorney stated he would file a petition seeking a new trial on a writ of errors.

"There were plenty of these, too," Offutt declared.

Oyster, not surprised at the outcome of the trial, stated, "I was convicted on the technical question for not having 'filed' my returns properly."

Says He Mailed Returns.

Oyster explained he had mailed the returns to the District tax collector's office.

Offutt indicated he would ask for a new trial a few minutes after a jury had found the defendant guilty on five counts during a 60-day period of violating the tax law. He is liable to be fined up to $5,000. The law does not provide jail sentences for violations.

Assistant Corporation Counsels Glenn Simmon and Oliver Gasch had contended that the merchant failed to make any return provided for under the tax law. The defense maintained that a return had been mailed last September, and several witnesses for the merchant substantiated this contention.

Searched Files Twice.

The defense said that if the return were not in District Building files, it must have been lost. Joseph P. Enright, of the District tax assessor's office, said that he had twice searched the files. The first time, he said, he found nothing; the second time, in January, he found a return marked "duplicate."

On the witness stand, Oyster told Judge Curran that he had spoken against the tax, because he considered it unfair, but nevertheless had conformed with the law. Witnesses quoted Oyster as saying of the law: "I'd be two kinds of a fool not to file."

2 Boys Find Pistol At Play; One Shot

A 14-year-old colored boy was wounded in his right wrist by his playmate yesterday when the boys were tinkering with a .22-caliber pistol they found near the Phelps Vocational School.

The injured boy, Carroll McDowell, 14, colored, 739 Second street northwest, was treated at Freedman's Hospital and allowed to return home.

Police said that the boy's playmate, Ernest Nelson, 14, colored, 1742 Six-and-a-half street northwest, accidentally shot him. Both boys are students at the vocational school.

Women Shoppers Will Aid Pickets

Jobless Youth's Ads in Rhyme Show Him D. C. Cold to Poetry

'How Can a Man Find Work to Do When Answers Are So Very Few?' Box M-10 Pens Lament.

The March wind which blows down Capitol Hill trees is no more unkind than is man with his disregard for poetry, believes "Box M-10," who advertised for a job in the ordinary way and then invested money in rhyme—with no better results.

The rhyme was nothing to brag about but I thought it would attract more attention. It did, of the curiosity variety. But it hasn't attracted a job yet," the rhyming advertiser said last night.

"Box M-10," who is B. J. Arbuckle, 1121 First street northwest, turned to verse-making last week and ran this ad in The Post:

WORK WANTED.

My quest for work as draftsman, clerk,
Seems such a waste of time.
Perhaps this Ad., if not too bad,
Will bring a job thru rime.

So, today, I write in verse,
The aim: to find work of my choice.
Should no "hoped for answer" come,
This rime sure must be really dumb.

How can a man find work to do
When answers are so very few?
The likes o' me can starve and wait,
While Labor's lull is charged to Fate.

My last appeal: I need a place
To sarn a meal to save my face.
Perhaps there is a job somewhere—
Just write and tell me, if you dare.

Box M-10, The Washington Post.

The next day in Box M-10 Arbuckle received this poetic answer:

You want a job?
Well, here's your chance.
Your nose is red; so stay in bed.
I'll be the nurse and comb your hair.

F. M. your rime sounds right o. k.
M-10 can see you nite or day.

Don't think F. M. followed through, however. F. M. was a "phoney" just like the others who have responded to M-10. Weary with the results he was getting, Arbuckle yesterday closed his poetic appeal with:

It costs "real dough"
For ads like this.
Serve your meals and give you car
While you are there.

Arbuckle, an alumnus of Columbia Technical Institute, is qualified "to do re-appraisal and survey work, run an elevator, be a night watchman, keep files, fill a clerkship or sell newspapers." In fact, he admits, his job-filling abilities are superior to his poetry.

Direct Subsidy Held Essential Aid to Housing

British Expert Refers to Experience Gleaned by His Country.

A direct subsidy from the Government is "absolutely essential" to solve the "very serious problem of slums and over-crowding" in the United States, according to Capt. Richard L. Reiss, British housing expert.

Capt. Reiss, in America for a tour of inspection of housing projects and a series of talks on England's handling of similar problems, discussed his views at an interview yesterday in the office of Nathan Straus, administrator of the United States Housing Authority.

"Direct Subsidy" Needed.

The Englishman referred to his country's experience in agreeing that $500,000,000 appropriated by Congress was not even "a drop in the bucket" in bridging the gap between housing for the lowest income group and what could be done by "loans in ordinary business." Parliament, he said, started off with limited sums that were later expanded greatly when results and difficulties were apparent.

"A direct subsidy is absolutely essential in any country that intends to try to do away with its slums," he said. "There is no country that I know of where it has been possible for them to touch this problem unless there has been a subsidy."

Capt. Reiss said he was encouraged by the start in America, but pointed out that England's results were the product of 20 years; America's of only four months.

World War Veteran.

A World War veteran, Capt. Reiss has been associated with British housing developments for two decades. From 1912 to 1914 he was a member of the rural inquiry board under Lloyd George, later serving for ten years as chairman of the British Garden Cities and Town Planning Association. He has been decorated by the Norwegian government for his services to housing in that nation, and is the author of several textbooks on the subject. He is a former member of the ministry of health and chairman of the London laborers dwellings and the committee on unhealthy areas.

He prefaced his remarks by saying that "the problem of slums and overcrowding is a very serious one in the United States, at least as serious as ours was in 1919, when we started." He said that America was open to criticism for having "too many of the family dwelling units which were two or three rooms."

'I Loved Her,' Cleric Says of Balm Plaintiff

'Hoped to Marry' Woman Who Wants $100,000 Because He Didn't.

By the Associated Press.

Steubenville, Ohio, March 3.—The Rev. Harold C. Zeis "always hoped" until November, 1935, that he would be able to marry Cora Lillian Burnham, the New York divorcee who is suing him for $100,000 because he courted her eight years and then married a widow.

The case, studded with love letters from both Rector Zeis and the divorcee, will be given to a jury of 12 middle-aged men tomorrow.

"There is no question in the world I was in love with her," the clergyman said. "I always loved her." But he married Mrs. Emma Sharpe, wealthy Steubenville society leader, a month after he visited Miss Burnham in a New York hotel late in 1935. He told her, then, the divorcee said: "I'm going to marry Emma Sharpe. I'm going to hob-nob with success. I'm going places."

Defense witnesses testified Miss Burnham repeatedly declared she could not marry the minister in the church because of church laws—restricting the remarriage of any but the "innocent party" in a divorce—and would not marry him out of the church.

Miss Burnham wept most of the day as Rector Zeis told of their hours together from 1927 when he met her in Bellefontaine, Ohio, until late in 1935. She took the stand late in the day to explain why she kept carbon copies of letters she wrote the minister.

Federal Report Urges 500 More Gallinger Beds

Health

the present report," said the introduction.

The four-volume encyclopedia on the Capital's public health establishment then launched into its subject and made the following recommendations, among others:

Change the name of the health department to department of health and hospitals, and house it in a building of its own.

More Hospital Beds.

Provide for full-time directors for laboratories, dental hygiene, mental hygiene, sanitary inspection and vital statistics and for the control of cancer, tuberculosis and venereal diseases; assistant directors for maternal hygiene, infant and child hygiene and aid to crippled children.

Add 250 beds in the medical-surgical department at Gallinger Hospital, also a 150-bed tuberculosis ward and a 100-bed pediatric ward. Install 150 beds at Freedmen's Hospital for tuberculosis sufferers.

Reopen the old Upshur Street Tuberculosis Hospital to provide accommodations for an additional 200 patients, if only on a temporary basis.

Increase the number of public health nurses by 110 and add 40 more graduate nurses to the Gallinger staff, along with five head nurses, two dietitians, three trained laboratory workers, four social service workers, 40 female attendants and 30 male orderlies.

Hire eight more sanitary inspectors.

Lunacy Laws Attacked.

Change the lunacy commitment laws to do away with the present judge and jury system, in open court, of determining whether the patient shall be sent to St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

Revive the sanitary code in its entirety.

Evacuate as soon as possible the 90-year-old children's ward and the five antiquated buildings housing tuberculosis patients.

While laying stress upon Gallinger Hospital's shortcomings in space and personnel, the Federal investigators lauded the spirit of nurses and doctors, with particular reference to their personal conduct.

"Corridor Petting Denied."

"I observed no indifference, frivolities, or distractions from the business at hand, nor any evidence of defective morals," said Dr. F. C. Smith, who made the hospital study.

The above comment obviously was directed at Richard W. MacKenzie, an out-of-town hospital consultant, who made a short study of Gallinger last fall for the Budget Bureau and in his report to Acting Director Daniel Bell charged that corridor petting was not uncommon.

"After careful inspection of the institution," said Dr. Smith, "and an inquiry into its budget and organization, it is believed that many of the complaints are justified.

"Most of them arise from overcrowding and insufficient numbers of personnel. Others are the result of a certain defect in the organization whereby proper co-ordination is lacking between the visiting staff and the full time staff."

Co-ordination Urged.

To correct this lack of "singleness of responsibility," the report recommended appointment of a clinical director to co-ordinate all matters pertaining to ward care. He would be preferably someone connected with neither Georgetown nor George Washington University medical schools, whose faculties and students now share the responsibility of caring for the sick at Gallinger.

"Most of the complaints arising from patients in any hospital are due to insufficient bedside care," the report said, "and at Gallinger in spite of the best efforts of the nursing force, adequate bedside care has not always been provided.

"While no instances of neglect were observed, it is safe to assume that unavoidable omissions in nursing service are a frequent occurrence in the overcrowded, undermanned wards at Gallinger. The nursing personnel, both graduate and pupil, impressed me as being of very high type, zealous and devoted to their duties."

A 6-Year Program.

The report, which was carefully checked and revisions ordered by Surgeon General Parran, recommended that the improvements be planned and budgeted over a six-year period.

Though tuberculosis cases are not admissible in any of the local private hospitals, their facilities might well be used to relieve congestion in the medical-surgical wards at Gallinger pending erection of the proposed 250-bed addition, the report said.

In his estimates to the District Commissioners for the fiscal year beginning next July 1, Health Officer George C. Ruhland included an item for the Gallinger addition but it was deleted before the estimates reached the Budget Bureau.

Dr. Ruhland's services here during the last three years were warmly praised.

"The Health Department is perfecting a creditable and increasingly effective piece of public health work, especially during the last few years," the report said.

Gallinger Hospital and the tuberculosis sanatoria at Glenn Dale, Md., have been operated by the Health Department only since last July, when they were transferred from the board of public welfare.

In connection with Glenn Dale, it was recommended that the adult and children's buildings be operated separately as at present. Dr. Ruhland, backed by his advisory council, believes that congestion in the adult building should be relieved by sending the overflow into a section of the children's ward, under proper precautions of segregation. The plan was vetoed by the Commissioners.

Beds in corridors, and crumbling and scaly plaster and paint over the heads of patients (above), will be no more—provided recommendations of Surgeon General Thomas Parran and staff are carried out.

Text of Charges Against TVA

Text of the 23 charges made against the Tennessee Valley Authority, as compiled by Senators William H. King and H. Styles Bridges, and which they want the Senate to investigate, is as follows:

"1. Whether there has existed conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States in the purchase of lands for reservoir sites and as phosphorous deposits;

"2. Whether the majority of the members of the TVA Board have gagged the minority in appearances before Congress, by the suppression of the minutes of their meetings, and in other ways;

"3. Whether the administration of TVA has been scandalously wasteful of public funds not only in the purchase of lands but also in the excessive costs of certain of its soil erosion control and reforestation schemes:

Partial to Monopolies?

"4. Whether it has exhibited partiality to great corporations and monopolies to the detriment of the small consumer in its power contracts;

"5. Whether the said authority has sold hydroelectric energy which is actually 'firm power' as such term shall be defined by the Federal Power Commission, as 'secondary power' as such term shall be defined by the Federal Power Commission in such a manner as to conceal and mislead the Congress and the public as to the value of such power and the beneficial interest therefrom.

"6. Whether any officer or director of authority has been improperly influenced, directly or indirectly, either by political preference or other consideration in return for bestowal of such contracts;

Long Contracts Cited.

"7. Whether the unusually long life of these contracts in contrast with the 30-day-notice contracts of the War Department for disposal of Wilson Dam power prior to enactment of the act, is not detrimental to the proper functioning of authority under its congressional mandate to extend the benefits of its surplus hydroelectric power as widely as possible among the people;

"8. Whether or not the authority has conducted its affairs in a clandestine manner such as issuing public statements of its power policies which later have been secretly rescinded; conducting its meetings by star chamber methods, and resorting to secrecy to the point where the authority has resisted the production of its minutes under a Federal subpoena in a Federal court, and by other means cloaking its policies and activities in mystery and silence.

Deception Suspected.

"9. Whether the authority has contemptuously and insolently committed a gross deception upon the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives in that it presented to the sub-committee on independent offices of that committee on December 13 a set of figures in justification for beginning of construction of the Gilbertsville Dam which were grossly false and inacurrate and 24 per cent smaller in dimensions than plans arrived at by the authority in the previous August.

"10. Why the authority has not complied with that part of subsection (a) of section 8 of the TVA act, as amended, which required that the principal office of the authority be maintained in the immediate vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala.

"11. Why the authority has not complied with that part of section 14 of the TVA act, as amended, which requires (a) that the Tennessee Valley Authority should have submitted to Congress on January 1, 1937, its allocation of costs to the various activities under its control up to that time, and (a) that the Tennessee Valley Authority submit in each annual report thereafter its similar allocation of costs for the period covered in its report.

"12. Why the Authority has suppressed and withheld by means of pretexts the Conmptroller General's Audits of the Authority for the fiscel years 1935, 1936 and 1937, required to be submitted annually to Congress under section 14 of the act as amended;

"13. Whether the Authority is guilty of creating deceptive or untrue propaganda, press releases, speeches, or public statements, attributed to TVA directors and officers both open and secret, in the press, on the radio, in the schools and in the church, and bickering for power within the organization with a resultant breakdown of morale among the personnel.

14. Whether an autocratic and merciless attitude has characterized dealings with politically unimportant home owners dispossessed by reservoir floods.

U. S. Defense At Stake.

"15. Whether it has neglected the agairs of national defense, one of the fundamental responsibilities of the Tennessee Valley Authority, for its "incidental" function of power development and sale.

"16. Whether it has offered unfair inducements to industrial organizations to leave their established locations to settle within the Tennessee Valley Authority territory.

"17. Whether it has forced rural customers to purchase expensive, unnecessary and undesired electrical appliances under threat of refusing to supply electricity, and actually to have permitted potential customers to make heavy investments in appliances after which service was refused until further purchases were made of unnecessary and undesired electrical appliances.

Tax Return Questioned.

"18. Whether the tax contribution to the several States in which the authority operates is the equivalent of the taxes of a private corporation owning an equal value in real and personal property;

"19. Whether by accounting methods and cost charges applicable to private industry, the electrical rates of the authority provide a legitimate, honest 'yardstick' of equitable rates of private industry;

"20. Whether the Tennessee Valley Authority has mingled in labor disputes involving employes of a newspaper unfriendly to the dominant faction of TVA at Knoxville, to the extent of using Federal funds in the employment of one or more attorneys who were loaned to serve such employes as legal counsel against that newspaper;

"21. Whether any responsible official of TVA conspired with or influenced the TVA chapter of the American Federation of Government Employes to adopt a resolution declaring that newspaper to be "unfair to organized labor;"

"22. Whether the TVA directly or indirectly has attempted to harass, influence, and retaliate against newspapers who oppose any of its policies;

"23. Whether the generating capacity planned to be constructed by the authority is not actually in excess of all probable future demands, taking into consideration the privately owned generating capacity in existence within transmission distance of TVA's plants."

Two Senators Urge TVA Quiz On 23 Charges

TVA

President, will receive serious consideration. The resolution was sent to the Senate Commerce Committee for report, and Chairman Royal S. Copeland of that group said that hearings on the need for the investigation probably would be held next week. This would give Chairman Morgan an opportunity to present formally his charges.

King and Bridges, in their list of 23 charges which have been made against TVA, propounded one which may collide with a forthcoming message of President Roosevelt regarding the world and domestic phosphate situation. TVA has been experimenting with an electric phosphate process which would greatly cheapen the cost of the fertilizer. In revealing his plans for a message on phosphate the President withheld all details.

Conspiracy Hinted.

In the list of charges compiled by King and Bridges the first raised the question "whether there has existed conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States in the purchase of lands for reservoir and as phosphate deposits."

Bridges last night declared that in view of the situation which has developed and the demand for an investigation of TVA, he believed the President owed it to Congress to expedite his message on phosphate as much as possible in order that the Senate may know exactly what is proposed, especially in relation to the TVA.

Chairman Morgan in his Wednesday night statement, calling for a Congressional investigation of his agency, directed his attack on David Lilienthal and Harcourt Morgan, fellow directors with him of the TVA. Centering his charges around the marble claim of Senator George L. Berry against the TVA, Chairman Morgan said he was confronted with "an attitude of conspiracy, secretiveness and bureaucratic manipulation."

Honesty Held Lacking.

He added that "the real difficulty has been the effort to secure honesty, openness, decency and fairness in government," and asserted that the Berry marble claim presented an example of that difficulty. He contended that his two associates, without his knowledge and in his absence, entered into a friendly agreement with Berry for the appointment of a conciliator to fix the value of the marble leases in dispute.

Chairman Morgan said previously he had protested that the Berry claim was worthless and seemed an effort "to defraud the Government." Three Federal court commissioners earlier this week upheld his contention the Berry marble leases were without commercial value.

Lilienthal, particular target of Morgan's attack, arrived in Washington yesterday but declined to make any statement at this time in reply to the TVA chairman.

Norris Comes to Defense.

Senator George W. Norris (Independent), Nebraska, father of the TVA, however, defended Lilienthal and Harcourt Morgan from the chairman's attack. He said he thought it "unfortunate that Morgan should try to create a sentiment against the TVA and its operations just at a time when appropriations for the TVA are in conference between House and Senate."

Norris said Chairman Morgan was "complaining about a condition (the Berry claims) which is ended." He added that "the other two members of the authority were not in favor of paying anything to Berry and they never agreed to pay him anything."

placing a heavy and unjustifiable burden on the fit.)

A comprehensive health program which includes medical care insurance or "some other effective form of socialized medicine" is a national need on which all intelligent groups of public-spirited citizens are agreed. (Said Dr. John A. Kingsbury, of New York.)

125 Leaders Attend.

Eduard C. Lindeman, chairman of the committee which called the conference, said 125 leaders in Government, medicine, education and science were in attendance. Together with George B. Galloway, of the National Economic and Social Planning Association, Dr. Lindeman is largely responsible for inauguration of the meeting, which he declared to be of an exploratory nature.

Taking the stand that in a democracy where freedom exists "responsibility is exalted," Dr. Lindeman stressed the need for thoughtful consideration of the human resources problem in America.

"Assuming that the most sensitive Americans would prefer to utilize their energies for purposes of social reconstruction at home rather than embark upon doubtful adventures abroad, how might this wish become a national program of action?" he asked, declaring that if only a partial answer resulted from the conference it would have been successful.

"Natives" Dying Off.

Dr. Frank Lorimer, secretary of the Population Association of America and former director of the technical sub-committee of the National Resources Committee, told the conference that "if the fertility rates and death rates at specific ages now prevailing continue, the native white and Negro populations in American cities will be reduced 50 per cent in two generations.

"The present retreat from parenthood," he said, "is one index of a competitive and unstable economy with high-speed insecurity and social strain."

On the "verbal level," Dr. Lorimer declared, all Americans believe in the Declaration of Independence. He charged, however, that American conduct has not borne out this belief.

"In actual day-by-day conduct, people have been used and thought of as instruments, in disregard of their interests as persons. The employment and laying-off policies of many corporations is proof of this," he said.

Dr. Kilpatrick declared that one of the big duties of American schools is to teach "intelligent criticism" that will break the stranglehold of the wrong idea of success."

He charged that schools have so failed in their duty that the term "apple polishing" has come to apply to anyone "who takes an interest in what is going on in the school room."

Schools have not only created artificial stupidity among their students, but have resulted in a great deal of emotional maladjustment among them, he declared.

Competition Chief Lesson.

"I have no doubt that a great amount of delinquency is furthered, if not actually caused, by the schools' treatment of the nonbookish child," he said, maintaining that schools develop "competition as the main motive of life."

The three "hopeful heads" under which Dr. Kilpatrick classified his "encouraging" remarks declared that intelligence can be built up, that it is possible "to work for the good life," and that personality resources can be "called out and developed."

Special Services Will Observe Roosevelt's 5th Year at Helm

President, Cabinet and Other High Officials Will Attend Rites at St. John's Church; Old Order Followed.

President Roosevelt will observe the fifth anniversary of his first inauguration today by attending special services at St. John's Church, in the company of the Cabinet and high Government officials.

Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's, will be assisted by Dr. Howard Wilkinson, of St. Thomas', the President's church, and by the Rev. F. R. Wilson, rector of President Roosevelt's church at Hyde Park.

The order of worship, based on services followed at George Washington's inaugural on April 30, 1789, was arranged for the 1933 inauguration at President Roosevelt's request by his former headmaster, Dr. Endicott Peabody, of Groton School. Virtually the same service was held at the time of President Roosevelt's second inaugural, January 20, 1937.

Every member of the Cabinet, except Postmaster General Farley, who is out of town, will attend this morning's brief exercises at St. John's. Vice President Garner is expected, as well as Speaker of the House William B. Bankhead, Senator Alben W. Barkley, Representatives Sam Rayburn and Robert L. Doughton, Chairman Marriner S. Eccles of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Rear Admiral Emory A. Land and District Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen and D. I. Sultan. About 100 Government officials and high-ranking officers have been invited to the services.

Kostelanetz Gives Nation Records to Be Played in 1988

Andre Kostelanetz, concert and radio orchestra leader, arrived here yesterday and presented Dr. Herbert Putnam, librarian of the Library of Congress, with two phonograph records, sealed and to be saved for criticism 50 years hence.

They represent, he said, 'the true, typical spirit of America and Americans of this age."

The records are of George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," and Ferde Grofe's "Cloudburst" from the celebrated "Grand Canyon Suite." The records will be put in a sealed container for opening in March, 1988.

"In my opinion," he said, "these works incorporate musically the essence and melody that is typical of the fast-changing American scene."

Touhy Files Plea In Kidnap Case

By the Associated Press.

Roger Touhy, under sentence of 99 years for the ransom kidnaping of John Factor in Chicago in 1933, appealed to the Supreme Court yesterday in an effort to gain his freedom.

Touhy's petition said his conviction was void because "John Factor was never kidnaped and was never under any restraint of any kind." He charged that "the pretended kidnaping was procured by John Factor to deceive public officials and thereby escape extradition to England."

Barking Dog Reveals Nurse Shot to Death

Buffalo, N. Y., March 3 (AP).—A barking dog led to the discovery today of the body of Mrs. Mary Lou Britting, 59, mysteriously shot to death in a kitchen in suburban Gardenville. Mrs. Britting, a widow, was employed as a nurse at the home of Mrs. Emil Lein, 75, an invalid.

Whipping Post Too Good.

Providence, R. I., March 3 (AP).—A judge here today told a father who beat his 6-month-old baby that the whipping post was "too good for fellows like you"—and gave him a 30-day jail sentence. The father, Henry Charkjian, 20, pleaded guilty.

'Mail-Order' Pair Pen Farewells to His Sweethearts

Pittsburgh, March 3 (AP).—Jimmy Kniss and his "mail order" bride busied themselves on their honeymoon today writing letters to Jimmy's 65 former sweethearts. The letter read:

"To all my loved ones. Sweetheart: This is to notify you I have to stop corresponding with you. I have found the woman I love and have married.

'Don't take it too hard. Someone had to lose. I will keep all your letters if my wife will let me. If you want your picture back, I'll mail it—if you send the stamps. Goodbye with love. Jimmy."

Jimmy, 31, and Mary Slem, were wed last night. He estimated he spent $1,000 on stamps and photographs in 10 years' correspondence with girls before he found "complete happiness."

Way Open, Father Tells Kidnapers

New Rochelle, N. Y., March 3 (AP). A third appeal to the kidnapers of Peter Levine to "make contact" was made late today by the father, Murray Levine, on the eighth day of the 12-year-old boy's disappearance. From his home Levine sent out this message:

"I appeal to those holding my boy to make contact with me at once. I am ready. The way is open."

Opera Forum Tonight To Hear Julia Schelling

Julia E. Schelling, sister of the symphony conductor Ernest Schelling, and famed in her own right as a lecturer on music, will speak at an opera appreciation forum tonight at the Rialto Theater. Prof. Will Hutchins, of American University, is to preside. The forum was arranged by T. Arthur-Smith, local concert bureau manager, to provide a question-and-answer session for persons interested in opera.

and which will bring the Navy to the treaty level.

Vinson sponsored the bill and also the policy amendment which has Mr. Roosevelt's backing and "makes it the intent of Congress that the United States shall have a fleet sufficient to protect both coasts at once." This commits the Administration to establishment of both Atlantic and Pacific fleets, which ultimately will cost $3,000,000,000.

Committeemen dissenting were Representatives Ralph E. Church (Republican), Illinois; Ralph O. Brewster (Republican), Maine, and W. Sterling Cole (Republican), New York. Each fought the bill bitterly, charging it was an "invitation to war" and that it was inspired by Great Britain, which wanted the United States to join it in policing the world.

Profits Bill Disputed.

Shortly after the bill was reported, sharp controversy broke around another war measure—the May bill to take the profits out of war. The House Military Affairs Committee filed a report urging enactment and denying contentions of a minority report that it was "of the stuff of which Hitlers are made."

The majority views, prepared by Chairman Andrew J. May (Democrat), Kentucky, author of the bill, denounced as "loose thinking based on noble sentiment" the minority's theory that the measure would make a war-time President a dictator and lead to confiscation of the Nation's wealth.

Meanwhile a high State Department official revealed that the United States "is very much interested" in the sovereignty of South Pacific islands and indicated the Government might claim some for use as airplane bases.

It was said State Department geographers had conducted a lengthy study of the island situation, and that the United States and Great Britain had exchanged notes on the subject. Most of the islands belong to the Phoenix, Gilbert and Ellice groups.

Strife Flares Anew Between Church, Reich

Rearrest of Niemoeller Stirs Farmers to Protest Nazi Policies.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 3.—Protestant supporters of the Rev. Martin Niemoeller were alarmed tonight as it became apparent that even his family did not know where he was being held in jail.

The militant pastor, who was freed technically last night after conviction on charges of opposing the Nazi state by speaking against its leaders and violating pulpit regulations, was re-arrested immediately.

Authoritative circles explained it had been necessary to place the militant pastor in "protective arrest" after the "lenient sentence of the court." He was given seven months in jail, already served during his long wait for trial, and fined $600. Radical Nazis apparently were irritated by the sentence.

Members of Niemoeller's immediate family were unable to learn where he was detained. The state police, however, permitted his attorney to see him before he was transferred—presumably to a concentration camp.

Rural Sections Alarmed.

As a result of the new arrest of the pastor, long the spearhead of church opposition to Nazi ideology, the strife between church and state flared anew. The long struggle had seemed on the road to appeasement after the agreement between Fuehrer Adolf Hitler and Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, of Catholic Austria.

In Berlin itself the uneasiness in church cricles seemed confined chiefly to the pastor's Lutheran Jesus - Christus Church in the borough of Dahlem.

But strong repercussions were felt in the rural communities, where the church continues to be the social as well as the spiritual center.

To the average Protestant or Catholic farmer, a clergyman is almost sacrosanct, and they decline to believe a man like Niemoeller, whose patriotism has been unquestioned, can be an enemy of the state.

The determination of the farmers was illustrated only a few days ago by the appearance of a delegation from East Prussia to obtain the release of 30 East Prussian pastors arrested for continuing to take up collections for the confessional movement and for reading from the pulpit the names of persons who left the church.

Insist on Keeping Faith.

The first act of the episode, which became known only today, took place at the war ministry, where the farmers insisted that "we want to render every possible service to Der Fuehrer in peacetime as farmers and in wartime as soldiers, but there is one thing that must not be taken from us—that we continue to serve our Lord Jesus Christ faithfully."

The war ministry sent them to the church ministry. From there they went to the foreign office, where they pointed out the dangers of having church unrest along the German border.

Most of the ministers were released.

Blonde Arrested As Spy in Britain

London, March 3 (AP).—Inquiries in the United States were believed today to have led to the arrest of a handsome, middle-aged Scottish widow in Great Britain's latest counter-espionage investigation.

Blonde, smartly-dressed "Mrs. Jessie Wallace or Jordan," was taken into custody last night at Dundee, Scotland. A number of documents were seized.

The Daily Mail said the arrest was the outcome of "widespread inquiries on the Continent and in the United States." Police declined to say officially whether the case was linked with the current investigation by the American Department of Justice of espionage in New York.

Barbour, Ex-Fighter, To Seek Senate Seat

Red Bank, N. J., March 3 (AP).—W. Warren Barbour, "The Millionaire Kid" who won the national amateur heavyweight boxing championship a generation ago, announced today his candidacy to regain a seat in the United States Senate.

Barbour has had the support of both Republican factions headed by State Senator Lester H. Clee, unsuccessful candidate for Governor, and former Gov. Harold G. Hoffman.

'Semi-Nude Life Class' Is Abandoned by WPA

Boston, March 3 (AP).—A "semi-nude life class" in which professionals and students were to model in bathing suits for art students has been canceled, Works Progress Administration officials said today, "because the project might be misunderstood by the public." An instructor said the class was to have been for advanced students who could not afford art school fees.

Treason Trials Called Mere Showmanship by Nemesis of Czarism.

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

New York, March 3.—Alexander Kerensky, first revolutionary Premier of Russia, tonight asserted the Bolshevik regime which drove him out of the Kremlin 20 years ago was "now nearing the brink of a precipice and is pushing itself over by its own malicious schemes."

The stocky little Russian, who has been an exile from his homeland since the October revolution swept him out of power six months after he had overthrown the czarist regime, made his prediction on a basis of the current "show trial" in Moscow.

"The end will come," he said, "not by a new revolution, but by a coup d'etat in the Kremlin—or if it should come earlier, by a war catastrophe."

Sitting in a walnut-paneled study at the home of Kenneth F. Simpson, New York Republican leader, the one-time leader of the "Menshevik revolution" carefully outlined the steps by which he believed Josef Stalin would be thrown out of power.

"The trials are mere showmanship," he said. "They are forms of propaganda, and as for the so-called confessions, they are obtained by a kind of third degree that has no parallel anywhere else in the world.

"It is psychological as well as physical—threats to relatives, wives and children, as well as personal torture.

"But what is concealed is a growing unrest among the peasants, who are now equipped for organization. When the overthrow of Stalin occurs it will be the greatest event in the history of democratic countries, because a democratic Russia, together with the United States, can save the world from totalitarian rule."

ALEXANDER KERENSKY.

The "show trial" now taking place in Moscow, in which 21 important Bolshevists are charged with plotting Stalin's overthrow, was described by Kerensky as a "confession of weakness."

"What would you think if President Roosevelt were suddenly to announce: 'All my Cabinent members and my generals and ministers are German and Japanese spies!' It would be an impossible regime."

Franco Prepares For 'Final Blow' On Teruel Front

Hendaye, France (At the Spanish Frontier), March 3 (AP).—An insurgent communique broadcast from Salamanca tonight declared that "the calm which followed the capture of Teruel will soon be interrupted."

Confirming unofficial reports from insurgent sources that a large-scale offensive was impending, the communique said Generalissimo Francisco Franco's forces straightened their lines about Teruel and on the southern front preparatory to delivering the "final blow."

Meanwhile, Franco presided at a meeting of the insurgent government council in Burgos which promulgated a decree revoking the right of divorce for Spaniards in insurgent Spain. The measure canceled a law enacted in 1932 after the republican government replaced the monarchy. The 1932 divorce law was one of the first measures adopted after the abdication of King Alfonso and was designed to "separate the church and the state."

Diet Group Seeks Aviators' Apology In Tokyo Wrangle

Tokyo (Friday), March 4 (AP).—Tension mounted in Tokyo today as the controversy between the government and the Diet (Parliament) over the drastic national mobilization bill generated new incidents.

A Diet sub committee demanded a war office apology after aviation officers yelled "shut up" to hecklers.

Cordons of police were drawn around the home of 13 representatives who allegedly were marked for attacks similar to one made on Isoo Abe, head of the Social Mass Party.

The 73-year-old party leader was injured by assailants who clubbed him in his bedroom, gashing his forehead and face, and cursed his political views.

U.S. Radio Station Asked to Further Pan-Americanism

The establishment of a Government radio station to further Pan-American relations was advocated by Senator Dennis Chavez, of New Mexico, in a radio speech last night. Chavez said he and Senator McAdoo, of California, had introduced a bill for erection of such a station at San Diego, Calif.

Chavez criticized Secretary of the Interior Ickes for his recent British broadcast, although not mentioning him by name. The Senator termed him "the Don Quixote of American politics," and said that "after disposing of the 60 American windmills [he] now wishes to tilt with Mussolini and Hitler."

Berengaria Fire Holds Up Voyage

New York, March 3 (AP).—Fire swept the luxurious first-class lounge of the Cunard liner Berengaria and caused damage estimated at more than $10,000 today.

Many of the 150 passengers who had come aboard the vessel last night fled to upper decks.

The fire was the second the Berengaria has suffered in three weeks. When she docked at Southampton, England, on February 14 several of her cabins were damaged.

The liner's sailing, scheduled for today, was postponed until tomorrow. Only third and tourist-class passengers will be carried.

Peasants Join Austrian Drive To Remain Free

Nazi Influence Increased by Reorganization of People's Group.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, March 3.—Austrian peasants entered the Nazi-disturbed political arena tonight with a resolution supporting Chancellor Schuschnigg in his efforts to keep Austria independent.

The Federal Peasant Council under Josef Reither, former minister of agriculture, met and resolved "as free peasants in a free Austria" to follow the course of independence laid down by Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, assassinated in a Nazi uprising.

"The Austrian peasant opposes a system based on force."

Reorganization Pressed.

Meanwhile the reorganization of People's Political Representatives progressed. The group was established after the July 11, 1936 Austro-German accord to give Nazis a voice in Austrian affairs, but until now it had been unimportant.

Under the impetus given the Nazi movement by the conference February 12 between Schuschnigg and German Fuehrer Hitler, however, the reorganization now will increase Nazi influence in almost every phase of national life, including the Fatherland Front, Austria's only legal political party, the provincial governments and guild organizations.

Dr. Hugo Jury, Nazi leader, will be named as the nationalist representative of the state council, the Federal economic council and the federal culture council.

Nationalists Advance.

Austrian nationalists, who said their movement's purpose was to make one step each day toward Nazi victory, advanced two other steps today.

Field Marshal Alfred Jansa announced he was about to retire as chief of the general staff of the Austrian army and that Maj. Gen. Franz Boehme would be appointed as his successor. This move was believed to be in compliance with German wishes.

Gov. Karl Stepan of Styria Province—an arch foe of Nazism and a Catholic—also resigned, and Schuschnigg appointed in his place Karl Trummer, lawyer, who was believed more favorable to the nationalist movement.

Minister of the Interior Arthur Seyss-Inquart, after returning from Graz in Styria, where he strove to work out a compromise with more ardent Nazis, said he would visit other provinces in the next few weeks.

The purpose of these visits, he said, will be "to lay the foundations for an undisturbed organization of the Nazi movement throughout Austria."

bases for German troops on Soviet soil.

The fate of Nikolai Bucharin, former editor of official Soviet newspapers, and Genrikh G. Yagoda, former chief of the secret police, also appeared sealed.

Bucharin, once a close associate of Nikolai Lenin, testified he had helped organize a peasant revolt in Siberia while he still was in the confidence of the party's leaders.

Yagoda admitted he had refrained from repressing Rightist plotting against the regime while he was assistant chief of the Ogpu in 1927 and 1928.

Vladimir I. Ivanoff, deposed chief of the Soviet timber industry, admitted he had plotted to turn Russia's northern forests over to Rightist magnates and had spied since 1934 for the British intelligence service.

Joined Party as Spy.

Ivanoff, slight, sandy-haired and hawk-nosed, disclosed how he had joined the Bolshevist Party in 1914 as a Czarist secret agent and "was guilty of the worst crimes as a member of the Rightist bloc."

Ivanoff implicated Bucharin in a plot to kill Lenin, one of many contemplated assassinations to which the defendants confessed. In 1918, he said, Bucharin talked about "removing Lenin."

"How?" Vishinsky demanded.

"Up to physical destruction," Ivanoff answered.

P. T. Zubaroff, former vice commissar of agriculture, testified of a plot in 1936 to assassinate Premier Vyacheslaff Molotoff and of discussions of ways to kill Joseph Stalin, War Commissar Klementi E. Voroshiloff and Lazarus M. Kaganovich, commissar for heavy industry.

Outlines Movement.

Alexis I. Rykoff, Lenin's successor as premier of the Soviet Union for almost a decade, and, with Bucharin, the main defendant, admitted planning to overthrow the regime and restore Russia to capitalism.

Rykoff gave a historical outline of the Rightist movement, which, he said, was started about 1928 while he was premier and spread throughout the country. He acknowledged that he, Bucharin and leaders of the ring were the central force.

Fleeing Chinese Held Menaced By Own Guns

Chiang's Army to Halt 100,000 at Yellow River, Japanese Say.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Friday), March 4.—Japanese army dispatches said today a Chinese army of 100,000 men had been caught in a virtual "death trap" in Southwest Shansi province while Chinese asserted Japan's Central China advance had been halted by guerrilla raids.

The Japanese accounts said the Chinese, pursued by columns attacking from the north and east, were fleeing toward the Yellow River, but that detachments of the Chinese central army with machine-guns were posted at the main fords to halt the retreat of their compatriots.

The Japanese have reported the army of 100,000 in retreat for four days and boasted Wednesday that 50,000 Chinese had been slain in the rout to the Yellow River.

(In Washington, the Chinese Embassy announced receipt of a telegram from Hankow which said in part:

("The Japanese claim that huge Chinese forces in Shansi province are facing the imminent danger of annihilation is ridiculed by competent observers who, pointing out that the mountainous character of Shansi province is especially suitable for guerrilla warfare, believe that there is little chance for a complete occupation of that province by the Japanese.")

Japanese themselves acknowledged that China's strike-and-run tactics had harassed them seriously for a week on the front, north of Nanking. Japan was disclosed to have lost a large area it had taken in weeks of bloody fighting along the Tientsin-Pukow Railroad.

Hitler, in 'Tails,' Receives Wilson

Berlin, March 3 (AP).—Introducing himself to Fuehrer Hitler with the phrase, "the President of the United States accredits me near you," Hugh R. Wilson, former Undersecretary of State, at noon today presented his letters of credence as United States Ambassador to Germany.

Wilson, wearing regulation full-dress with white tie and black vest, spoke in English. Hitler, also in tails, replied in German.

Military honors were accorded Wilson as he arrived and left the German whitehouse.

Two Soviet Consulates In Germany Must Close

Berlin, March 3 (AP).—The German charge d'affaires in Moscow, under instructions from Berlin, notified the Soviet foreign office today that Russian consulates in Koenigsberg and Hamburg must be closed before May 15.

The action was explained here as retaliation for the "continued, persistent harassing" by Soviet authorities of the German consulates at Kiev and Novosibirsk, Russia, which it was understood, also would be abandoned by May 15.

In Best Clothes, Capital Greets Muscat Sultan

Little Ruler of 500,000 Gets Same Welcome Accorded Kings.

The Sultan of Muscat (and Oman) came to town yesterday, and official Washington gave him a royal welcome including high hats, dress uniforms, a war-strength troop of cavalry, and any Army band which played the Muscat-Oman national anthem before it broke into our own.

The little Sultan, whose bright turban raises his height slightly above the shoulders of Secretary of State Hull, obviously enjoyed the fanfare immensely.

During the barrage of camera flashes which greeted him at the Union Station he smiled with pleasure and shifted his silver-hilted sword into view. Behind him grinned the two tall countrymen who accompanied him on this visit to America.

All three were dressed in flowing white robes covered by brown capes. The Sultan's cape was decorated with gold stitching. All three wore swords and American-type shoes.

Gen. Malin Craig was resplendent in his Army finery and Admiral William D. Leahy was fitted out in gay Navy dress when they joined the welcoming party at Union Station. Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb represented the Marine Corps and smiling Secretary Marvin McIntyre was there for the White House.

Public "Crashes" Party.

Several hundred members of the "general public" broke in on the royal party and considered themselves well rewarded when they saw the little Sultan walking by the tall Secretary of State, who gave a dinner in his honor last night at the Carlton.

The first official meal, however, was at the White House—where President Roosevelt greeted the party at 1 p. m. yesterday.

Later in the afternoon the G-men's stronghold was visited and then the Sultan "rested" before going out to dine with the State Department.

He will "receive the press" at 10:10 this morning in his suite at the Willard before visiting the Navy Yard and going to Fort Myer to be greeted with a salute of 21 guns.

Tomorrow the royal party will journey to Mount Vernon aboard the Navy's yacht Sequoia. Sunday they will leave Washington.

The Sultan rules only 500,000 inhabitants, but his salary is reported at $225,000 annually—three times that of President Roosevelt.

The little sultanate on the shimmering Gulf of Oman, however, is bound to the United States by a diplomatic obligation and friendship extending back to the days of President Jackson.

Although Oman is an independent sultanate, it is under the informal protection of Great Britain. Yet the welcome which His Highness is receiving here, the State Department said, is equal in every respect to that which would be accorded the English King.

It is the first royal-visitor reception Washington has had since Lord Tweedsmuir, Viceroy of Canada, was here last spring.

He Feted Americans.

However much the officials strain themselves to do honor to a reigning monarch, however, they can hardly expect to excel the welcome which was given the American diplomatic group which visited the sultain's country in 1934. The young sultan gave a "welcome" dinner at which he served a whole roasted sheep as an entree—and served it without benefit of knives or forks.

The sultan, whose name is Said bin Taimur bin Faisal, left his home two months ago for a leisurely journey around the world. Accompanied by only two companions, he acts the part of a plain citizen—except when he visits capitals.

The official party will be luncheon guests of Col. J. Mayhew Wainwright at Fort Myer today and the sultan will be guest of honor at the exhibition drill of the Third Cavalry and Sixteenth Field Artillery at the fort at 3 p. m. At 8 p. m., the monarch will be guest of honor at a dinner given at the Sulgrave Club by the Undersecretary of State.

Before leaving for Mount Vernon tomorrow, the royal party will make a sightseeing tour around the city and may put in some time seeing more of the sights unofficially before the departure on Sunday.

French Envoy Presents Credentials

27-year-old Sultan and his entourage of two lunched yesterday with President Roosevelt, and were treated to the native American dish of chicken a la Maryland. It was reported unofficially that the Sultan enjoyed the meal, even though he stayed with the President little more than an hour.

Hardly had the President bidden farewell to His Highness than His Excellency, Count Rene de St. Quentin, presented his credentials as the Ambassador to France.

To the President's assurance that the United States, no less than France, "is convinced of the necessity of safeguarding democratic institutions, respecting treaty obligations and fostering the increased exchange of goods between nations to their mutual benefit, the ambassador replied, France "will always be glad to manifest its active solidarity with the American Government in the fulfillment of a policy inspired by these basic principles."

This afternoon three princesses of a romantic and little-known state that rivals the exotic glamour of both France and Muscat and Oman will have tea at the White House. Ruhije, Maxhide and Myzejan, attractive young sisters of the King of Albania, are to be received by Mrs. Roosevelt. Accompanied by Faik Konitza, Albanian Minister, they will spend only a few hours in the Capital.

Whether they come from a great democracy of Europe, from the glistening shores of the Gulf of Oman or from the rocky coast of the Adriatic, distinguished visitors fail to upset the even tenor of the White House way. Chief Usher Muir would confess to no keener excitement than that implied in the laconic observation, "Rather a full schedule."

"Are your preparations for the princesses going to be about the same as for a D. A. R. delegation?" another usher was asked.

"Yes," was the unconcerned reply. "But the D. A. R. come in thousands; these are only three."

Bill to License Industry Held Recovery's Bar

By the Associated Press.

A spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers asserted yesterday the Borah-O'Mahoney industrial licensing bill would retard rather than aid recovery.

In a statement before a Senate Judiciary sub-committee, Elmer T. Cunningham, of New York, former President of the Radio Corporation of America, urged that the measure be set aside in favor of a business recovery program he has drafted.

The Borah-O'Mahoney bill, designed as an anti-monopoly measure, would require most industries engaged in interstate commerce to obtain Federal incorporation charters and to refrain from trade practices specified as unfair.

Cunningham advanced as a substitute these governmental policies:

A moratorium on reform legislation.

Repeal of the undistributed profits tax.

Modification of the capital gains tax to stimulate capital movements.

Elimination of the so-called "third basket" tax, applying to certain corporations.

Limitation on Government competition.

A review of existing legislation with an eye to modification.

Sound fiscal and monetary policies.

Harry N. Low Dies at 78; Was Patent Lawyer

Harry Niles Low, patent lawyer, bridge expert and long-time resident of Washington, died yesterday in his residence at 2933 Tilden street northwest, after a long illness. He was 78 years old.

He graduated from the Columbian University Law School, now George Washington University, in 1879, and had been practicing patent law in the District ever since. His son, Russel Niles Low, also a patent attorney, was in recent years associated with him.

Mr. Low was one of the original members of the Capital Bicycle Club. An expert bridge player, many of his younger days were spent in playing in tournaments in the larger cities throughout the country. His wife, Louise Hammond Marshall, of Washington, whom he married in 1888, died several years ago.

Surviving, in addition to Russel Low, is another son, Marshall; a daughter, Adrienne Louise Low, both of Washington, and four grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held at 3 p. m. tomorrow in the Gawler funeral home at 1750 Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

King Zog Sets Wedding To Countess April 25

Tirana, Albania, March 3 (AP).—The wedding of King Zog of Albania and Countess Geraldine Apponyi, whose mother was an American, was set today for April 25 in the Tirana Palace. Only the civil ceremony will take place then. Pandeli Evangheli, president of Parliament, will perform it.

Clare Huston Funeral Is Set For Tomorrow

Funeral services for Clare Aubry Huston, 80, designer of most of the postage stamps and currency printed by the Bureau of Engraving for 30 years, will be held tomorrow morning at the S. H. Hines funeral parlors, 2901 Fourteenth street northwest, at 10 o'clock. Burial will be in Woodland Cemtery, Philadelphia, in the afternoon.

Mr. Huston died eary yesterday at his home in Cathedral Mansions. He had been ill for about two months. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Frances Huckel Huston.

After 30 years as an artist and designer in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, he retired five years ago. For many years he served as chief designer for the bureau and was responsible for the 2-cent Washington shield stamp of 1903, the Louisiana Purchase series the following year, the Lincoln Memorial and Alaska-Yukon stamps of 1909, the 3-cent Victory stamp series after the war and Pilgrim series in 1920.

Yesterday H. M. Southgate, president of the Bureau Issue Association, paid tribute to Mr. Huston: "A kingly and agreeable man, he was a member of the old school. He did some wonderful work for the bureau," Alvin W. Hall, director of the bureau, said: "He had no superior as a banknote engraver. . . . There was no other individual in the Government service like him."

60 Families Flee Louisiana Flood

Shreveport, La., Mar. 3 (AP).—Backwaters from swollen Red River crept over lowlands south of Shreveport today, forcing 60 families from their homes. Red Cross relief workers hurried into the area.

Flood Isolates Los Angeles; Fear 124 Dead

Entire City Paralyzed as Rain Continues; 7,000 to 10,000 Homeless.

Flood

said Harry E. Drew, Los Angeles businessman.

The flood-torn area lay roughly from Ventura on the north to San Juan Capistrano on the south and from the Pacific Ocean on the west to the San Bernardino Mountains on the east.

Torrential rains fell for more than four days in the city and in the mountains alike. The abrupt rise of the mountains behind the city created a tremendous drainage. The rainfall in Los Angeles alone exceeded 10 inches. Nearby dry arroyos became raging streams.

Movie Stars Marooned.

Movie stars were marooned in studios. Schools were closed. Railroads ceased operating. Mud flew so thick at Santa Anita race track that spectators hardly could see the horses.

A heavy run-off from the cloudburst-swollen Santa Ana River struck Riverside, and 17 persons were reported missing. It inundated Santa Ana, farther downstream, with 3 feet of water, tearing away communication lines and leaving the extent of damage there only to guesswork.

An undetermined number of storm spectators were washed into the ocean near Long Beach when the bridge on which they stood collapsed. The number lost was generally estimated at 10, but an appeal to ships at sea to watch for survivors or bodies said 45 were on the bridge at the time.

John Roberts, air lines pilot who flew from Los Angeles to San Francisco with the first to get away, said:

"There literally is water everywhere.

"My home is in North Hollywood on the banks of a wash from Tujunga Dam. At 5 p. m. yesterday afternoon—the peak of the flood—there was 20 feet of water running over what normally is a bed of dust.

"The water lapped at the sides of my house.

"We had no electricity at times and our drinking water still was shut off when I left this morning. Yesterday, when the river rose, I saw three houses on the opposite side of the stream collapse and tumble into the flood.

"Motorists trying to drive down streets of the city found their machines washed against the curb by the current. The water was particularly strong at the intersections, running like rivers from the side streets.

Catch Rainwater.

"My wife and the neighbors had to put pans out to catch rainwater for drinking and washing.

"The town was torn by rumors of damage and deaths.

"Persons who have lived in the Los Angeles area for years said this was the worst flood they had seen.

"The water had receded a great deal by this morning and I was able to drive to the airport. But there were marks from the flood everywhere, on the streets and buildings and on the weary faces of the people.

"We left Burbank at 8:37 a. m. I circled over part of the flood area and saw that the river and its many washes had cut far into normally dry land. There must be thousands of acres still under water even with the flood abated.

"Whole Blocks Under."

"Between North Hollywood and Van Nuys we could see whole blocks had been inundated. It was raining steadily and whatever water wasn't coming from the dam was pouring from the sky.

"We flew up the regular air route over Bakers' Field and Fresno to San Francisco and Oakland.

Part of the time we were over the clouds and part of the time we flew by instruments alone. Occasionally we could see through a hole in the clouds and there was water quite a way up the valley. I have no idea how far the flood extends."

The six-day storm, which reached its climax yesterday in an unprecedented cloudburst, left the countryside scattered with broken bridges, ruined highways and wrecked houses.

Theaters and churches throughout the stricken area in the citrus belt opened their doors to refugees.

More than 1,000 persons, forced from their San Bernardino homes during the night, were housed and fed in the municipal auditorium by the Red Cross. All highways into the city were closed. Sheriff Emmett L. Shay reported seven dead or missing in that area.

Government weather authorities attributed the unusual storm to the freakish straying southward of barometric depressions which usually form over the northern Pacific and move toward the coast to bring rain.

American Red Cross headquarters here yesterday said 20 relief workers from the San Francisco regional office had reached Los Angeles and begun to give food and shelter to the 10,000 homeless persons in the flooded area.

List of Dead in Flood

Los Angeles, March 3 (AP).—The casualties in the southern California flood disaster included the following:

IDENTIFIED DEAD.

Mrs. Henry Lackey, Pomona.
Jack Lackey, Pomona, her son.
H. R. Wessing, San Jose.
Warren H. Atherton, Glendale.

Senate Slated to Vote Today On $48,156,328 District Bill

Budget

Senators expressed the belief that reports of crime conditions in Washington had been exaggerated despite the statements on the Senate floor to the contrary.

The bill carries probably the largest appropriation for miscellaneous street improvement projects ever written into a District supply bill.

The House bill provided $3,934,600. To this the Senate sub-committee added another $1,000,000, chiefly to absorb the surplus in the highway fund created when it struck out the circle underpasses.

New highway improvement items added at the full committee meeting yesterday amounted to $554,000. The only other change made in the sub-committee report was to raise the salary of Gwen Geach, secretary of the Minimum Wage Board and a former Capitol Hill secretary, from $2,500 to $3,800.

Relief Allowance Cut.

The $400,000 reservoir on Soldiers' Home grounds was sent to the Senate by the Budget Bureau after the House had passed the bill.

The printed bill also revealed that the Senate had restored $150,000 for the purchase of a National Guard armory site and had cut the limitation on the maximum relief allowance for one family from $75 to $60 a month. Public welfare officials had asked that it be raised to $100.

The special relief inquiry appropriation is only $5,000, although Senator Thomas had stated previously that it would be raised to $7,500.

Numerous changes, particularly in highway fund appropriations, are expected to be made when the bill gets into conference. Senator Thomas admitted that some of the items were inserted for trading purposes.

As the bill now stands it exceeds the 1938 appropriations by $2,690,752, and the House bill by $3,081,206, although the street lighting fund of $765,000 had been eliminated from the highway fund on the House floor without being charged to the general revenue account.

The Senate bill exceeds the Budget Bureau estimates by $811,636. This is accounted for chiefly, however, by the transfer in the street-lighting cost.

Thrice balked in his efforts to write into a District supply bill a parking-meter authorization, Senator Thomas served notice on the Senate that he will move to suspend the rules today, if necessary, to get the proviso inserted.

This means that the amendment will not be subject to a point of order but must be approved by two-thirds of the Senators voting.

Major Additions Listed.

Some of the major additions to the House bill made by the Senate committee are:

School items aggregating $605,558, including the following: Second story addition to Crosby Noyes school, $60,000; improvement of Woodrow Wilson High School grounds, $4,000; sloping floor for auditorium at Alice Deal Junior High School, $10,000; new teachers, $177,416; furnishing new junior high school on Banneker recreation center site and senior high school at Fifth and Sheridan streets, $242,585; purchase of textbooks, $20,000; additional fuel, $25,000, and administrative and supervisory officers, $18,117.

Most of these additions were recommended by the Budget Bureau in the original estimates.

The health department budget was increased of $94,020 and covered the following:

Additional nurses, $8,100; Tuberculosis Sanatoria, $28,780; Gallinger Hospital, $21,260; restoration of the southwest health center, $35,000, and $900 for purchase of silver nitrate for maternal and child health service.

Public welfare appropriations gained $233,435 in the bill. Although no change was made in the House figure of $900,000 for unemployment relief, the Senate sub-committee restored the administrative allowance of the public assistance division to 12 per cent. The House sub-committee had cut it to 7½.

The Senate sub-committee likewise restored the old-age pension appropriation to the budget bureau figure by adding $108,000, although Chairman Collins, of the House sub-committee, asserted it would not be spent.

Training School Aided.

Restoration of the National Training School for Girls and the Children's Receiving Home to the bill account for approximately $100,000 of the increase. The parole board was allowed an extra $3,440 for personal services; the District Training School, $3,000 for repairs, and the Industrial Home School for Colored Children, $7,945.

Other increases included:

Sewer department, $40,000; refuse department, $25,000; playground department, $32,920, because of the retransfer of school playgrounds from the community center department; fire department, $10,000 for repairs to apparatus; juvenile court, $6,280, and police court, $2,680.

House appropriations slashed from the bill were:

Dupont and Thomas Circle underpasses, $1,010,000; K street overpass, $320,000; repair of Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge, $30,00; municipal power survey, $15,000; schools, $54,801, including $12,301 for vocational education, $25,000 for playgrounds and $17,500 for purchase of school sites; expansion of house of detention, $10,000, and new land at Lorton, $5,000.

Mayfair Chief Plans 'Colossal' Birthday Fete

Other Night Show Places Add Attractions to Amuse Patrons.

By Chanticleer

The Mayfair, under the capable direction of Jimmy Byrd, is laying "colossal" plans for its third anniversary celebration next Thursday with the popular Beverley Stull and her accordion, Perry Martin, who sings and plays the piano; Leo Lisee, with ditties, jokes and personality; a new female singer, who is lovely to look at as well as hear, and a continental trio of violin, clarinet and guitar. If you are planning to be on hand, it is well to make reservations.

Every day a new skit is being added to the floor show at the Troika. Mme. Strelkfa, famous Russian ballerina, is the latest addition to their cast and is delighting with her interpretative toe dances. This week's list of celebrities at the Troika included Noel Coward, who found Durwood Bowersox and Sosha Barnovtsky, versatile artists, picking up all of the early Coward song successes and playing them to the delight of other patrons.

Pall Mall's visit to Brazil was so much of a success that next Wednesday, a party is planned in another Latin American country, Old Mexico. The orchestra, led by Mario di Polo, featured rhumbas and tangos. Several South American embassies were well represented and judging from their applause, approve of his rendition of their native music. Humberto Paloma, also plays a guitar and entertains with Spanish songs.

Charles Carlile is back at the Shoreham's Blue Room by request and is pleasing his public with request numbers. La Trianita, a Spanish dancer, is also doing a repeat engagement, and lays aside castanets for cymbals to do native Moorish and Andalusian dances. She has become so popular that offers have been made by a local theater for her to join their stage show. Also at the Blue Room this week: Journet and Severin in sophisticated dances, and Maxin Loew's Orchestra with Barnee directing.

Masculine attention at the Lotus this week centers on the Gay Ninety Girls in their Tin Type Revue. This revue is directed by Earl Lindsay and is a cleverly costumed show. Nelson's boxing cats are being held over for a second week. Lorraine Chevalier, a contortionist, and Joan and Bill Swan, lightning tap artists, complete the cast. Al Norton continues as m. c. and pretty Marion Dawn warbles pleasantly to the music of Bill Strickland's orchestra.

New faces: Anne Nigra, a starlet song stylist, and Bob Dunnington, accordionist, have moved into the Anchor room at the Annapolis to replace Ward DuVal. The Silver String Revelers, local boys all, headed by William Chaney at the guitar, are entertaining nightly at the Hi-Hat. Cleve Topley and Dick Reger render popular songs.

Here and there: Jimmy Crandell, manager of Brinkley's, finds the policy of no cover or minimum charge a successful one.

Kavakos Grill features entertainment that is different. Every night there is Brownie and his orchestra for dancing.

The Madrillon has a special dollar dinner Thursday, on the maid's night out, offering a choice of eight or nine entrees.

Casualty List.

Fourteen men and one woman made up the Central Committee of the Bolshevik Party in the period immediately preceding the November revolution of 1917. It was under the leadership of this group that the revolution was brought to a successful conclusion. Its members are therefore entitled to be considered as the "founding fathers" of the Soviet state.

Of the 15, four played very little part in the dramatic events of 1917 and soon passed out of the picture. These four were Messrs. Nogin, Artem, Miliutin and Lomov. What has happened to the other 11? The record is interesting and eloquent:

Lenin—Died in 1924 and since enshrined as the god of a new dispensation.

Gregory Zinoviev—Shot by a Soviet firing squad for sedition, Trotzkyism and other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Leo Kamenev—Ditto.

Leon Trotzky—In exile.

Mme. Kollontai—Soviet envoy to Sweden.

Jacob Sverdlov—Died in 1918 of natural causes.

A. I. Rykov—Now on trial for his life for high crimes against the Soviet regime.

Nicholas Bukharin—Ditto.

A. A. Joffe—Committed suicide.

M. Uritzsky—Assassinated.

Josef Stalin, who can now compliment himself on having liquidated, or outlived, all his fellow architects in the building of the Russian Utopia.

A Vicious Bill.

Seldom has a minority group done more effective work in exposing a vicious bill than the trio which is leading the House fight against H. R. 9604. Without mincing words, Representatives Maverick, Anderson and Kvale have torn Congressman May's war profits bill to shreds. If the House is sincere in its efforts to legislate for the national welfare, it will not proceed further with consideration of this measure without close examination of the minority's biting indictment.

Sponsors of the bill have written into its title the pretentious claim that it would "prevent profiteering in time of war . . . equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace." Actually, it provides no formula to prevent profiteering. It would merely give the President full powers to control industry, business and labor in a dictatorial manner. Such control might or might not minimize profiteering, but it is extremely far-fetched to assume that profiteering would be thus automatically prevented.

The bill does declare a general policy of absorbing all abnormal wartime profits through taxation. But revenue measures for that purpose would be left for future action of Congress. The minority seems to be fully justified in denouncing this flimsy provision as "sloganized pretense" and "fraudulent advertising."

Opposition is further justified by the arguments used in the majority report in support of the bill. Virtually every provision of the measure would centralize governmental power in the hands of the President during wartime. Yet the majority indulges in the naive comment that "we wish to conduct a war of defense in the most efficient manner for the preservation of America, as America has always been, as America now is, and as we trust America always will be, a land of individual initiative, a land of personal freedom, a land where ambition and effort find a reward . . ."

To preserve democracy the committee would pave the road to fascism. It would give the President absolute and dictatorial powers. With such authority in the Executive, Congress would become a useless appendage to the Government. It might be even too weak to proclaim an end of a war and thus terminate the Executive's absolute powers when all emergency had passed.

Such a measure on the statute books would be a constant invitation to provoke a minor war for the purpose of taking over the reins of government. Any President who wished to change our form of government or commit the country to fascism or communism could doubtless find a pretext for invocation of the act. The committee majority talks only of making war effectively and equalizing its burdens. But actually it would open the way for the most revolutionary and subversive of changes.

It is not to be supposed that the American people are so gullible as to surrender their democratic system in advance of any real need. As the minority wrote in its ringing report, "this bill should receive the fighting opposition of every class in America."

Trouble With The Yardstick.

The need for a thoroughgoing investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority has long been apparent. Repeated clashes between Chairman Arthur E. Morgan and his two colleagues on the board, over the methods followed in dealing with the private utilities, have emphasized the lack of any clear statement of policy in the organic law. The extensive administrative discretion allowed the responsible officials in deciding important matters of policy has led to great friction. This might have been avoided if Congress had previously defined the long-range objectives of the Government's power program.

Dr. Morgan has long urged a frank declaration of purpose that would give the private utilities reasonable assurance of what the Government intends to do and would make it possible for private interests to negotiate on an open and fair basis. Until quite recently it had been generally assumed that differences of opinion over policies were the chief cause of the strife within the TVA. Now the controversy over the Berry marble leases has brought to public attention another type of difficulty which Dr. Morgan seems disposed to consider as more serious than the policy issue.

"The real difficulty," he says, "has been in the efforts to secure honesty, openness, decency and fairness in government." Supporting his charges by citing incidents connected with the marble leases, he asserts that he has been forced to contend with "an attitude of conspiracy, secretiveness, and bureaucratic manipulation which has made the proper and effective conduct of TVA business increasingly difficult."

These are serious indictments, reflecting both directly and impliedly upon the official conduct of fellow board members. An investigation is made doubly necessary by this latest development which causes Dr. Morgan to demand an open hearing, "full and impartial with nothing hidden."

The Norris proposal to entrust such a probe to the Federal Trade Commission is obviously unsuitable, since it would require one Federal agency to sit in judgment upon another and could hardly yield any very useful suggestions. A joint Congressional investigation seems to be the only method of procedure competent to provide a basis for amendments to clear up obscurities in the law and establish a clearly defined and consistent statement of policy for administrative guidance.

When laws are ambiguous and administrative agencies thereby acquire too great latitude, abuses of discretionary power inevitably arise. And unless a strict accounting is demanded, there is also a temptation to relax administrative vigilance and afford opportunities for the kind of raids upon the public treasury that Dr. Morgan appears to have been fighting.

Even if harmony reigned among the directors of the TVA, and the competence of its administration had never been challenged, an investigation into the TVA program would still be imperative. Despite Dr. Morgan's shift of emphasis, from questions of policy to those of honest and efficient administration, the major problem is that of defining our power policy. Only by Congressional action to this effect can an end be put to uncertainties that paralyze the private utilities and prevent them from making plans for future expansion.

A Maryland Tradition.

A very pretty little whipping party marked the close of the social season over in Baltimore on the eve of Ash Wednesday. All concerned are to be congratulated on having carried off the affair in the best traditions of the so-called "Free State." Here is substantial encouragement for those who are wont to deplore the contemporary "decline of manners."

Certainly, in combining thoroughness with elegance, the Maryland whipping party was in happy contrast to the ribald Shrove Tuesday flogging fete at Wormwood Scrubs Prison, England. There, Mr. George Bernard Shaw, with characteristic boisterousness, felt called upon to lead a "public outcry." That seems the more silly since in the London flogging there were only 15 lashes. Baltimore gave 20.

We scarcely need to be told by the Associated Press that Sheriff Joseph C. Deegan, in doing the honors with the cat-o-nine-tails, was both "calm and dignified." Less would not have been expected of a Maryland gentleman.

The prisoner, Mr. Clyde Miller (after all it was his party), also behaved graciously. He knew what the guests expected and he did not disappoint them by attempting to take his beating impassively. He was courteous enough to "cringe" at the first two blows, to "whimper" at the third and to accept each of the subsequent 17 with a well-bred "groan of pain." The Baltimore Sun, further, reports that he "sagged at the knees," which is also the accredited eighteenth century tradition.

No matter what may be said, it is breeding that counts. In Mr. Miller's place a vulgar person might have grown so exuberant with the festive spirit of the occasion as to shout that the State of Maryland was a damned sight bigger brute than himself, since it did not have the excuse of being drunk when it staged a beating. Such comment would have been quite distasteful, in fact almost crude.

In some quarters there has been mild criticism of the decision to make the Baltimore whipping party a strictly stag affair. There are some who think it unfortunate that the wife of the guest of honor had to wait in a parked car outside the jail, straining her ears for the echo of a scream. And it does seem that her position was not unlike that of the small child who has been relegated to bed while his parents and their guests are making merry downstairs.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Miller, we understand, was thoughtfully furnished with a complete play-by-play account of all that happened. And it must be remembered that, socially, Baltimore is a very conservative city. Indeed it is one of the few places where it is still ordained that no woman shall cross the threshold of a masculine club. Fatti Maschii, Parole Femine, you know.

Many Happy Returns.

A quarter of a century has now passed since the Department of Labor, youngest of the major administrative offices in the Federal Government, was divorced from the Department of Commerce to be given distinct and separate Cabinet status. Congratulations at the anniversary dinner here last night were only a minor indication of all that this development has come to mean in the expanding life of the Nation.

From its beginning the Department of Labor has been blessed with a nonpolitical and objective outlook which has been of substantial assistance in forwarding its statutory duty of "fostering, promoting and developing the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, improving their working conditions, and advancing their opportunities for profitable employment."

Signature of the bill creating the department was almost the last official act of President Taft, on March 4, 1913. The appointment of William B. Wilson as the first Secretary of Labor was one of the first official accomplishments of President Wilson. Similarly, a major share of the credit for the establishment of the department as a separate entity is shared by Senator Borah, a Republican; Representative Wilson, a Democrat, and Samuel Gompers, who was aloof from political affiliation, but wholehearted in his ambition to secure in the Government "a department that shall be distinctly a labor department, dealing with labor questions and all that comes directly under that term."

Building on these nonpartisan foundations, the Department of Labor has gone steadily ahead in its task of developing administrative machinery which can effectively assist in solving the problems of the wage earner while maintaining, in the words of the present Secretary, that "fairness to every interest in a democracy (which) is of paramount importance." The job has been well done, and those now in charge of the destinies of the department may rest content that they have not merely maintained, but have constructively developed, the ideals handed down by their predecessors.

In its conciliation and immigration services, its children's and women's bureaus, its very valuable bureau of labor statistics and its developing public employment service, the Department of Labor impinges directly on the lives of many Americans. But far more important than the actual content of its varied activities is the spirit which animates the department as a whole. In relations with State agencies, as in those which directly touch the welfare of the individual, the Department of Labor has always sought conscientiously to forward national welfare by making easier the mutually helpful co-operation of groups whose interests sometimes seem superficially discordant.

That its work has often been criticized by those primarily concerned with their own special interests is in reality a tribute to the impartiality of the department's steadfast program. On this twenty-fifth anniversary its personnel may feel assured that their patient and intelligent work is deeply appreciated, not merely in the Capital, but by the country at large, not alone by wage earners, but by the many classifications of Americans who, directly or indirectly, have benefited from their work.

"I would like to remind you that a politician is a human being," said a politician over the radio last evening. That's just like a politician—always bragging.

From De Haagsche Post, The Hague, Holland.

There is little reason for cheerfulness at Geneva. Never have conditions been more difficult for the League of Nations. A great measure of uncertainty has arisen, more especially among the smaller states. That is what Berlin and Rome . . . have brought about by their propaganda. The remarkable fact about this propaganda is, however, that it may create unrest but attains little in definite results.

There is also no reason yet to believe that the League of Nations will not surmount this phase. For too many states are already dependent for their security on the protection which France and England may offer; even states which are flirting with Berlin and Rome, such as Poland, Yugoslavia, and recently even Austria and Hungary.

England and France will not . . . recognize Italian rights over Ethiopia, as Rome would so very much have liked to see. Mussolini is not behaving himself, London and Paris say. No more will these countries, by cutting out sanctions, help to bury collective security, which some would wish to declare dead. Nobody will object to shelving them for the time being in a cabinet labeled "dangerous toys." But even then one will not have given up all hope of taking them out again, when the world will have recovered sufficiently, and when the preponderance of the peaceful states will be again great enough to render a firm maintenance of peace and security possible again. Who would like to see the present situation accepted as a standard for the future of humanity?

Native Poets Only?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A proposal to appoint a poet laureate of the District of Columbia appeared in a letter to The Post of February 27. This would be entirely in accordance with the custom of many States, which have already chosen their poet laureates, but there is one suggestion the writer made that I consider unjust.

He expressed the thought that anyone from any other State, now residing in Washington, should be eligible. To cite an example of his opinion, a native Californian, born and reared in the West, loyal to Western ideas and prejudices, who has recently received a Government appointment, would be eligible to compete with a native Washingtonian.

This ruling, if adopted, would make it possible for a poet laureate of another State, or a famous poet from another State, to simply change his residence and automatically become a District of Columbia poet.

I venture to say that if one were to investigate the many writers in Washington who claim to be District of Columbia poets, one would find that the majority of them are not natives. An anthology was published in 1932 which claimed to represent the work of District of Columbia poets and contained poems written by versifiers who originated in many other States. Few of them were natives of Washington.

Let me suggest that any competition for a poet laureateship of the District of Columbia be restricted entirely to those who were born in this area. I have no doubt that there are enough native Washingtonians to uphold the dignity and prestige of this city without having to import competitors from the 48 States of the Union. How much consideration would be given a Washingtonian in a competition for the poet laureateship of another city or State?

30-Year Retirement.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since President Roosevelt has put his O. K. to the policy of a permanent solution to the job problem we may look forward to the adoption of a 30-year retirement plan for Federal employes. Unemployment, the by-product of technological advance, has opened the eyes of the Administration to the irreparable damage done to national human economy. When our young people out of work join the underworld at the rate of 700,000 every year it is high time that the Government do something about the selfishness and indifference to the needs of our youth.

Keeping men on the job until senility renders them unfit is a crime against youth. Instead of giving away relief money the Government should retire its workers after 30 years of service; such a policy would give work to young people who today squander talents and live upon Government bounty for which they render not the least service. In America people are not calling for socialism, but for industrial justice, and President Roosevelt is on the right track when he approves of a 30-year retirement plan for Government workers.

Spanish War Wind-up.

In fairness to contributors writing on other subjects, the letter columns of The Post will now be temporarily closed to correspondence on any aspect of the Spanish civil war.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Apparently Miss Edith Kolker did not read the scholarly series of articles on nationalist Spain written by another eyewitness of events in that country, Mr. Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly. Seeing is believing, and I venture to suggest that, if Miss Kolker goes to Spain, she will have an opportunity to observe the facts exactly as they were reported by Mr. Sedgwick and myself.

Miss Kolker is concerned about German and Italian influence in Spain. She would be well advised to be even more keenly exercised about Soviet intervention in Leftist Spain. Does she know that the principal boulevard of Madrid has been re-named the "Avenue of the Soviet Union?" This was reported in an Associated Press dispatch under the date of November 1, 1937, the twentieth anniversary of the foundation of the Soviet Union.

Does my critic know that the records of the rump Parliament of Red Spain show that on February 1, 1938, the same day on which greetings were dispatched to Barcelona by a dwindling minority of the United States Congress, the Premier Juan Negrin spoke most "appreciatively" of the help which his government had received "from Mexico and Russia?" If so, Miss Kolker will understand why Capt. Anthony Eden himself, while he was still foreign secretary of Great Britain, was able to confound his present ally, Mr. David Lloyd George, in the following words now inscribed in the minutes of the British House of Commons:

"The result of Nyon has been to facilitate the arrival of very large quantities of material arriving in Spanish government ports. Of course, there have been enormous quantities of material arriving at Spanish government ports throughout the year. Official Soviet government figures show that Spain now is Soviet Russia's third best customer.

"From January to September of this year (1937), Russia shipped to Spain nearly ten times as much in weight and four and one-half times as much in value as during the corresponding period in 1936. During the summer months of this year I could not tell the House that during that period there was more material reaching the insurgent forces than was reaching the government forces."

Kindly permit me to submit a final word about the New York impressions of Mr. Herbert R. Southworth, of the Spanish Information Bureau in that city. There is a simple explanation of the fact that "Spanish publications from loyalist Spain can be bought all over the city." A generous portion of the $650,000,000 gold reserve, property of the whole Spanish people, which the adherents of the Madrid-Valencia-Barcelona regime appropriated from the Bank of Spain, has been devoted to propaganda purposes in the United States and elsewhere.

Needless to add, there is abundant evidence for each statement both in my original article as well as in this communication; consequently I confidently submit to the intelligent, cultured readers of The Post that our concern with any man, in the words of St. Ambrose, is "not with what eloquence he speaks, but with what evidence."

(Dr.) JOSEPH F. THORNING.
Mount St. Mary's College,
Emmitsburg, Md., March 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to add my say regarding the bombardment of civilians in the Spanish War in answer to Mr. Thorning's letter of February 18.

I know nothing about the bombardment of Caceres, which could very well be Fascist propaganda, and it is useless to prolong discussions on details of this nature. Putting aside the errors of one side or the other, the fact remains that the republican government offered an aerial truce; that the foreign powers approved the plan; and that the rebels have rejected it; thus proving once more that the rebels have a definite plan to which seemingly they will hold and maintain to its ultimate consequences.

PETER BORRAS,
President, Central Spanish Relief Committee for Republican Spain.
Washington, Feb. 25.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is an affront to the intelligence of anyone who understands the situation to read the secular newspapers' interpretation of the Spanish War. The truth of the matter in a nutshell is that Russia sent propagandists into Spain some years ago and gradually persuaded some of the people to rebel against God and church. This finally culminated in a few Reds getting control of the government and causing widespread destruction of churches, schools and the lives of thousands of nuns, priests and Catholics.

Just because the Fascists stepped in and gave the Christians a hand doesn't mean these Christians are Fascists—they are not! The Catholic Church deplores any form of totalitarian government. If you fell into a pit and were in danger of losing your life and a Republican came along and offered to help you, would you refuse just because you were a Democrat? Or would you be a Republican just because you accepted his assistance? This is the same situation in Spain. Thousands of dollars, men and munitions were being poured into Spain from Russia to help the Communist cause and they had no choice but to accept the Fascist help to defend their lives and their God!

It is ridiculous to blame the poverty and suffering of this world on the Catholic Church. It existed before the church did, and still exists in China, India and even in Russia, who pretends to be trying to convert the world to her "better living," and the church has very little influence in these countries. On the contrary, the Catholic Church has been the greatest alleviator of suffering, both physically and spiritually, through its orphanages, almshouses, hospitals, schools and churches. Workers in these fields have given up everything the world holds dear to unselfishly and wholeheartedly devote their lives to it. It is absurd to accuse them of being against the masses when they are devoting every ounce of their energies to helping them. Many people are in need of the dash of intelligence needed to figure this out for themselves.

When the clergy of churches other than Catholic, the intelligentsia of the United States, and now Congress itself (witness the blessings recently sent the loyalist government by several Congressmen) already have been taken in, to a large extent, however unconsciously, it really is serious. Communism is the avowed enemy of God, and when God is taken out of the heart of man a barbarism remains with all its horrors. This fact alone should make any person with the most elementtal intelligence have nothing remotely to do with it. MRS. J. MOORE.
Washington, Feb. 23.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There is not a dictator in the world who hates organized religion and Christianity more than does Mussolini. Il Duce has repeatedly asserted that fascism would eventually do away with "these temples." R is only because he decided the church was useful as a means to an end that he allowed the Pope to remain—not as a free Christian, but as a Fascist prisoner in the Vatican. Those who defend fascism act as propagandists for a movement that has as its object the destruction of democracy and Christianity.

In Defense Of Shelley.

AGAIN we see demonstrated the apparent fact that a dramatic author with an eye to box office receipts is under no compunction to reproduce historical characters in the light of facts, good taste, or the sensibilities of those present in the audience who might have some previous knowledge of the subject.

"I Am My Youth," which opened in Washington this week, is concerned with Shelley and his father-in-law, William Godwin. The idealistic poet hopes for reformation of the industrial conditions prevalent in England, and he goes to Godwin as author of "Political Justice" for support. The plot of the play is the disruption of Godwin's household through the application of his own ideas by Shelley and Shelley's ignoring, in his reformatory zeal, hurt to individuals.

Exception has been taken in the past to this interpretation of Shelley, but our complaint is on more provable grounds. In order to sustain their theme, the authors have with total disregard for dates pushed all events within the compass of a few months in 1815, with Godwin's house as the only scene. Here they have Shelley meet Godwin and Mary for the first time in Harriet's presence.

As a matter of record, Shelley met Godwin October 4, 1812. Whether he met Mary then is not known, but since he went off with her in July, 1814, it seems a bit arbitrary to have them meet in 1815, as is also Harriet's presence when Harriet had left Shelley in April, 1814, taking with her their child. No mention of any offspring occurs in the play, though Harriet does tell Godwin that if she could have one she might hold Shelley. In reality, Harriet does seem to have banked on Shelley's feeling for his children considerably, so that wasn't a bad guess on the author's part.

Let us contrast the picture of Shelley as given by his friend, Peacock, with that as depicted by Messieurs Pascal and Blum. Peacock testifies to Shelley's terribly upset condition during the months of growing friendship for Mary when he pleaded with Harriet to return. He describes the tall stooping youth as bereft, "his eyes bloodshot, his hair and dress disordered," waving a bottle of laudanum. On the stage we have instead a dapper figure coldly bidding his wife goodby in company of the entire Godwin family, while Godwin blesses the elopers. As a matter of record Godwin actually forbade the pair to enter his house and did not relent for several years.

Both he and our authors ignored the fact that Shelley had gone greatly in debt borrowing money for Godwin. In the play the irresponsible Shelley borrows from Godwin. Also for the sake of dramatic art we hear that Byron and Claire have joined the elopers and all gone to Europe together. Actually, Byron did not join the Shelleys and Claire until two years later.

We doubt if there is any foundation for the sinister suggestion that Fanny Imlay killed herself when accused of having an affair with her step-father, Godwin. We know that she had been refused a position to teach in an aunt's school, that she had liked and corresponded with Shelley before Mary knew him and was very lonely when they went away; that as debts mounted, Godwin's temper became irascible. Interpretation of character, however, in the light of events, is not in our dramatists' line.

Lest the audience be for a moment bored, neither is there any interpretation of the poet through any of his work. There is never a hint of the soul that wrote:

Gentleness, Virtue, Wisdom and Endurance—
These are the seals of that most firm assurance
Which bars the pit over Destruction's strength;

No, there is only one mumbled stanza of "Ode to the West Wind," written, incidentally, four years after the timing of the play. As if afraid of taxing the credulity of the audience in believing that this callous creature could indeed be the poet Shelley, he and Mary are made to repeat ecstatically several times, "Oh wind, if winter come can spring be far behind."

"There's no doubting it now," the spectator will say to himself, those are Shelley's lines, all right, so I guess those authors know what they are talking about."

Spurned Whale.

Are San Franciscan noses supersensitive? Or was it solely lack of thrift that led the city fathers to spurn the gift of a perfectly good whale and spend $1,835 of the tax payers' money to remove it from their midst?

The whale was washed ashore one day last week. Almost any New England coast community would have seized upon it as a gift of God. In the colonial days of Massachusetts any whale cast up on the shore was appropriated, as a gift from God, for the salary of the minister and upkeep of the church. No odors would have been too pervasive to have kept thrifty folk down Gloucester or New Bedford way from flensing the monster, extracting the blubber and whalebone and reducing the flesh to fertilizer.

San Francisco paid $1,885 to have its whale pulled off the beach, and it sold the carcass to a tallow company for $50. New Bedford papers please don't copy.

Tom McCarthy

Mr. and Mrs. Announce!

PERSONALLY, having never been affiliated with any group more important than the human race, I have always had a deep and abiding interest in that peculiar segment of humanity which gains prestige through what is known as "society." With this in mind I have made a mild survey into the method by which people gain such prestige.

McCARTHY.

Through information acquired at this and other papers, I have learned that it is, like many other branches of the newspaper business, a matter of reporting. However, since the social sphere is something with which I have but the vaguest acquaintance I have taken the trouble to catalogue some of the interesting information which has appeared on local society editor's desks . . . but which fortunately has never before been given the grace of print.

And my present belief is that society is a creature which has survived through the foresight of keen-eyed editors rather than obsequious correspondents.

There was, for example, the reporter in a Virginia Army post, who, in line with her notations on the gyrations of the local social set, volunteered the information that "Captain and Mrs. ——— will have Miss Gladys ——— for the week-end."

Less ambiguous and in some ways even more startling was the information advanced by one local lady that "Mr. and Mrs. ——— and their daughter have removed to Florida, where they have taken up their permanent residence, and where Mr. ——— will engage in the culture of amaryllis bulbs."

For some strange reason that item never saw the light of day, and was probably reserved for the "ambition-never-dies" section.

• • • •

SOME of the social items, however, are more than decently intriguing. They leave something to the imagination, and definitely pique the curiosity. The item in question gave no indication as to the habits of Mr. Granville ———, but threw out some very dirty implications!

According to the country correspondent, "Mr. and Mrs. ———, Mrs. ——— and Mr. Herbert ——— called on Mr. Granville ———, who is in bed again, on Sunday."

Probably the acquaintances of Mr. Granville ——— had become accustomed to his sedentary habits, but to the city reader the implications are as shrouded in mystery as they are exciting.

In line with that type of social news was the item received from Warrenton, by a local paper, other than this one. It informed that "Miss Virginia ———, according to well founded rumor, will soon go to New York for an exhibition."

And, if that weren't enough, the same correspondent vouchsafed the information that one "Murray ———, who has a studio in Warrenton, is at work with Miss Jane ——— and Mrs. Crosby ———, among his models."

The correspondent then clinched the matter by adding a final and philosophic observation that "Warrenton is now offering a diversity of attraction and employment to the many different types necessary to make a world."

But all the comic ones don't come from the suburban districts. One even which never reached the attention of either the city, or natural science, editors was reported by the friends of one local lady of some social prominence.

"Mrs. ———, of this city," said the item, "quietly celebrated the seventy-first anniversary of her birthday Monday. Mrs. ———, whose 71 years are not an unusual amount for one to be carrying, has the distinction of having borne and reared 15 children, all of whom are living as she turns the corner leading to eight." Which, I think you will agree, is a pretty neat trick, in anybody's paper.

Sometimes the social items as received are fraught with drama. They have a stark nakedness which outdoes Hemingway. The correspondent cuts the item . . . just as the reading becomes exciting.

There was, for example, the information received by this paper in this form: "Judge and Mrs Lewis ——— entertained at dinner on Friday for Mr. and Mrs. Ralph ———, Mr. and Mrs. Frank ———, and Mr. Hugh ———. While sitting at the table their daughter, Mabel, announced her marriage to Mr. Hugh ———, two weeks previous."

• • • •

BUT there's something reassuring in some of the information which reaches the society editor's desk. Not all of it arrives in items. It sometimes takes the form of correspondence from the volunteer reporters of births, deaths, bridge parties, and marriages.

One correspondent, of that type, checking on a photo she had volunteered for newspaper publication, had a really earthy touch in her last line. Inquiring as to the disposition of the photograph in question she informed, "as I recall it was sent to the Society Editor of The Post, when or before the engagement was announced, which was just before the World Series of ball games."

Sometimes the self-promoters, on the society page, offer their own accounts of their social adventurings. Here is a reprint from a letter mailed from northern Canada by a socially respected hostess of the local scene.

"Saturday night at dinner, we heard 'Ah Ah' and turned to see what the excitement was.

"And there was Miss Ginger Rogers of film fame entering with her cousin Miss Phyllis Walker."

Then the earnest reporter informed, "May I say that Miss Rogers is indeed a very stunning person, but I can't seem to remember what kind of an evening dress she wore or what color. In fact, I believe in the excitement, I believe, I saw only her face."

Sometimes I'm glad that I don't have much contact with what is known as society. It's too dangerous!

Westbrook Pegler, whose column regularly appears in this space, is in the Los Angeles flood area and could not make his column available for publication today. One will appear tomorrow, it is hoped.

King Inclines Toward Chamberlain In British Crisis Despite Popularity Of Eden's Views; Conservatives Win By-Election.

By Our Ottawa Correspondent.

Ottawa.

THE POLITICAL CRISIS in Britain and the developments in Europe which have produced it have been followed with keen interest by the Canadian people and have let loose a varied flood of comment and speculation. Apparently the King ministry was simply given formal notification of the resignation of Mr. Eden and was not otherwise consulted about the moves recently made by the British government.

Last week opposition members tried strenuously to draw from Premier Mackenzie King, who is also minister of external affairs, some expression of opinion as to whether the new policy of the British government had his approval. Mr. King declined to commit himself in any way and deliverpd a long lecture about the dangerous impropriety of asking, in the Canadian Parliament, questions about affairs in Britain and other foreign countries which were framed in such a manner as likely to create misunderstanding and unpleasantness.

All he would say by way of answer was that his government had not been consulted about the new policy which led to Mr. Eden's resignation and had not offered any opinion about it. But whatever the views of the rest of the cabinet may be, the general impression in Ottawa is that Mr. King himself is on the side of Mr. Chamberlain and against Mr. Eden. As he is responsible for the conduct of Canada's foreign policy and can always muster a majority in the cabinet, it is his voice which counts.

Premier Mackenzie King Said Lukewarm For League.

Mr. King has always given lip service to the idea of the League of Nations and a system of collective security based upon it. But he has never shown any enthusiastic zeal for them, and in recent years he has manifested a progressive lukewarmness about Geneva and its activities. When he headed the Canadian delegation to the Assembly of the League a few years ago he delivered a speech which indicated an anxiety to whittle down Canada's obligations in connection with the League and as a result called down on his head severe criticism in Canada.

Again last year when the estimates for the department of external affairs were up for discussion in the House of Commons he elaborated his views upon Canada's relations to the League. He frankly proclaimed his conviction as a result of a study of the international situation that the chief value left in the League was its usefulness as a forum for discussion of international problems, as a clearing house for statistical information of an international character and as a social service agency of world-wide scope. He contended that its utility in these aspects fully justified the expenditures which Canada and other nations contributed to its maintenance and that it was worth continuing them indefinitely. But he also bluntly stated that his government had no longer any confidence in the ability of the League to preserve peace in a world of war-minded nations.

He has also made no secret of his dislike of the members of the League being committed by the Covenant to use force for the application of its principles against aggressors and of his desire to get Canada free from any responsibility for the enforcement of sanctions. He gave clear evidence of this at the time of the Italo-Ethiopian crisis when, after Canada's resident representative at Geneva had taken a lead for the application of sanctions in the matter of oil, he was severely rebuked from Otatwa and instructed to retract his action.

Liberals As Well As Radicals Disappointed.

MR. KING'S attitude has been very unpalatable not only to the radical elements in Canada as represented by the Canadian Commonwealth Federation but also to a substantial element of his own Liberal followers who believe in Canadian support for a system of collective security, whatever risks may be entailed.

His critics are disposed to attribute Mr. King's coolness to the League to an anxiety to placate the large body of isolationist opinion, which is particularly strong in French-Canada. They say that in view of the recent triumph of the new Union Nationale Party in the provincial field in Quebec at the next Federal election that it has involved Canada in commitments which will drag her into another European war. They continue that his foreign policy is being dictated by the hard necessities of the political situation in Quebec, where the Liberal supremacy, which had existed since 1896, is now being seriously threatened.

Mr. King's defenders deny this charge and maintain that he is simply a political realist who feels there is no excuse for doctrinaire stubbornness and for clinging to an idealistic policy which has no real relation to the actual facts of the present international situation.

Moreover, Mr. King has always subscribed to the doctrine that one fundamental necessity for Canada's foreign policy is a maintenance of national unity and the prevention of the recurrence of the deep racial fissure, which developed during the last war and came to a head in 1917 over the bitter controversy about conscription. For this reason he has looked with apprehension upon the domestic consequences of Canada's immersion in another European war and has steadfastly refused to give the British government any undertakings about Canadian support in such a conflict. He would, therefore, be fearful of the course advocated by Mr. Eden lest it would lead to a general European war between the dictatorships and their allies and the democratic nations.

He would prefer that every possible move should be made to avert such a contingency.

Accordingly, although he will probably make no public disclosure of his views, it is taken for granted in Ottawa that he is in complete sympathy with Mr. Chamberlain's policy of international realism and his attempts to secure world peace by direct negotiations with the Fascist dictators.

English Element Seen Largely Favoring Eden.

BUT TO JUDGE by the comments of the press, public opinion in English-speaking Canada is preponderatingly against the policies of Mr. Chamberlain and for Mr. Eden and his allies. Undoubtedly a strong contributory factor to this sentiment is the marked sympathy which a large element of the French-Canadian population under the guidance of the Roman Catholic church have been showing for some years past to the Fascist dictatorships. Almost to a man the French-Canadians are enthusiastic partisans of Franco, and in various French-Canadian papers Mussolini and Hitler have long been depicted as able, courageous and far-sighted statesmen and the sort of leaders that Canada badly needs to rescue her from the terrible menace of communism.

Moreover, there has emerged in Quebec a lively Fascist movement and there is also distinct evidence of a co-operative effort on the part of the Duplessis ministry and the local Catholic hierarchy to establish for industry a system of corporatism which has many Fascist features.

It has now become the deep conviction of most intelligent Canadians that in view of the menace offered by Japan on the Pacific, one of the primary interests of the Dominion is close co-operation between the British Commonwealth and the United States. But there is a widespread fear that its prospects, which a month ago seemed bright, will now be seriously impaired by the British gesture for a rapprochement with the Fascist powers.

Victory In Quebec Heartens Opposition.

MEANWHILE, the Conservative Party of Canada secured its first crumb of political comfort since the general election of 1935, when its candidate, George Neon, carried a federal by-election in Quebec by a large majority.

The Liberals had high hopes of winning the seat because its previous holder, the late Sir George Perley, who had, through his long representation, a unique personal hold on the division, had only a majority of 177 in 1935. But the result was a grave disappointment to them, as, with some few remote polls still to come in, the Conservative candidate has a majority of 1,656 over the Liberal, while a Liberal-Laborite candidate polled a few hundred votes.

The victory greatly heartens the Conservatives and apparently one of the chief factors in it was the decision of the Union Nationale elements in the division to support actively the Conservative candidate. Hitherto the Union Nationale Party of Quebec has been neutral in federal politics, but its leader, M. Duplessis, evidently now wants to take a crack at the King ministry.

Port Of Muscat

By Allan G. Brookes.

Capital Of Oman Sultanate.

HIDDEN AWAY among the mountains which fringe the coast of Arabia, on the western side of the entrance to the Persian Gulf, lies the little port of Muscat. Once a thriving city and center of the African slave trade with that part of the world, this capital of the Sultanate of Oman has lost most of its old glory and is today little more than a village. It has, however, the only good harbor on this part of the coast, and because of this, still maintains a small import trade in hardware and a small export trade in dates.

Muscat dates are famed in the East for their distinctive flavor, and differ from ordinary dates in their almost black color. There still exists in the hinterland some traffic in African slaves, and to this day occasional Arab dhows slip past the watchful British gunboats to land their human cargoes on the coast of Arabia. Contrary to general opinion, the slaves are usually well-treated by their Arab masters; they become good Mahommedans, and in time often marry into Arab families, finally to become freed men.

SOME THOUSANDS of miles separate Muscat from Zanzibar, an island off the east coast of Africa—but in the old days both places were ruled by the sultan, and even to this day they are closely connected in matters of trade. Dhows still sail between the harbors of Muscat and Zanzibar, their Arab sailors navigating with little more than antiquated compas, a small-scale chart and sometimes a quadrant, with which they are able to compute latitude, the finer art of finding longitude being unknown to them.

One sails to Muscat from Karachi, a port on the northwest coast of India, arriving on the morning of the second day, it being customary for the steamer to call at several tiny ports on the coast of Baluchistan before making Muscat. As the vessel approaches the coast in the early morning the jagged summits of the coastal mountains appear to rise precipitously from the sea—and it seems impossible for a harbor to exist in such a coastline. But presently, as though by magic, the ship glides through an opening between the steep cliffs, an entrance guarded by formidable black rocks jutting out of the water.

The harbor is little more than a cove, and is almost completely surrounded by the cliffs. From a gun somewhere not far away comes a salute, as though some unseen giants were shouting to one another across the harbor. Then a rattle of chain and the vessel is anchored. At once she is surrounded by native craft of every description, manned by shouting, screaming boatmen and carrying gorgeously arrayed Arabs, silent and proud.

HIGH UP on the cliffs are the crumbling remains of an old Portuguese fort, one of the last relics of the days when the Portuguese were masters of the Persian Gulf. A part of the fort is still in use—as the local jail. Here wretched human wrecks lie in chains: The Arabs, true to tradition, still mete out punishment swift and sure.

The bare cliffs surrounding the harbor seem like a page torn at random from a registry of shipping. For hundreds of years it has been the custom of every ship's captain who has entered the harbor to leave the name of his ship painted on the stone of those bleak cliff sides, until today little space is left. One can read here the names of ships whose bones lie far away, scattered in battle and wreck, their sailors having scaled those walls at the risk of their lives to perpetuate the names of the ships they served. This strange custom still persists in the little lost port of Muscat.

The town, if it can be called such, consists of a few balconied houses with their great gates, the hovels of the near-slaves, a market in which a handful of local produce is sold or bartered, and the home and hospital of the mission doctor.

PASSENGERS coming aboard at Muscat scramble for places on the ship's deck. Where once an Arab has spread his mat, no man may trespass. Some erect little tents of blankets, into which they thrust their heavily veiled womenfolk away from any strange eye, and there they remain until the end of the voyage.

By evening the last of the passengers has found a place on deck, the heat has lessened as the sun sinks behind the mountains, the last sling of cargo is lowered over the sides. Slowly the anchor comes aweigh, and the vessel slips out of the harbor, leaving astern a silent town. The Arab passengers gather in line for their evening prayer, facing the setting sun, and in the distance the harbor fades into the background of a jagged line of blue-black mountains.

"Full Many a Flower"

By Paul H. Oehser.

IT MAY BE SAID that publication is a vitamin well-nigh indispensable to a poet's growth. It is the alluring sunlight toward which sooner or later he is drawn by a strange heliotropism. Self-expression is the primal urge, but there must be some absorbing medium to receive the fruit of expression or else it is apt to perish. Young poets cannot always know how powerful a thing publication is and that it can break instead of make a poet if he yields to its magnetic pull before his wings are strong enough to withstand the terrific heat. It is pretty certain, though, that most of them will yield: it is the natural thing to do.

The "little" poetry magazines, ephemeral though some of them may be, are doing a real service in easing poets into full bloom and preventing many from dying of poetic rickets. They range in kind all the way from "Poetry: A Magazine of Verse" to unpretentious broadsides. Of the latter variety, "Let Us Sing" is now entering its third year. The February issue, in a single three-column sheet, contains new work of ten poets, besides devoting space to reprints and critiques. It is edited by Helen M. Salitros and Ken F. Hughes at 1180 West Twenty-ninth street, Indianapolis, Ind. They solicit "more and better material."

Oscar Brynes, a young new poet, has literally burst into print with a bang. Harcourt, Brace & Co. have just brought out his first book, "The Day's Work" ($1.25), which is a boldface narrative in somewhat rhymed verse of New York City's famous half-million-dollar armored car robbery. Mr. Byrnes has skillfully harmonized the structure of his narrative with that of the crime itself. There may be some question whether he has written poetry, but he has certainly told well an exiciting and dramatic story. A crooks' lexicon would be helpful, though, in re[illegible]

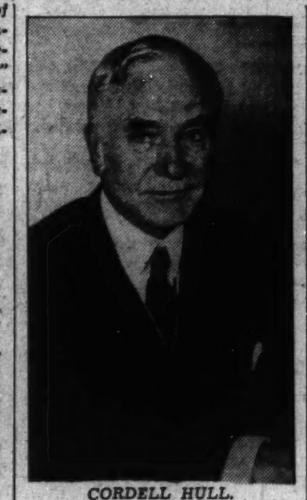
5 Years Of The 'Good Neighbor'

50 Nations Have Gone on Record in Support of Noninterference; Trade Pacts With 16 Countries Negotiated; Some Gains in Arms Limitation Reported by State Department.

Marking the fifth anniversary of the New Deal today and the inauguration in American foreign relations of the "good neighbor" policy, the State Department yesterday issued the following statement reviewing its work and policies during the last five years:



CORDELL HULL.

The Department of State of the United States is sometimes called the department of peace. The problem of peace is of constant concern to the department; preservation of peace is the cornerstone of the foreign policy of the United States.

President Roosevelt, in his inaugural address of March 4, 1933, dedicated the United States "to the policy of the good neighbor—the neighbor who resolutely respects himself and, because he does so, respects the rights of others—the neighbor who respects his obligations and respects the sanctity of his agreements in and with a world of neighbors." The good-neighbor policy is inherently reciprocal in nature. The Government of the United States endeavors to treat with scrupulous respect the rights of other countries and their nationals, and the Government expects similar consideration from other nations for the rights of the United States and the rights of our people.

The general attitude of the Department of State toward international relations has been summarized recently by the Secretary in a statement to the following effect: This country constantly and consistently advocates maintenance of peace. We advocate national and international self-restraint; we advocate abstinence by all nations from use of force in pursuit of policy. We advocate abstinence by all nations from interference in the internal affairs of other nations. We advocate adjustment of problems in international relations by processes of peaceful negotiation and agreement. We advocate faithful observance of international agreements. We believe in modification of provisions of treaties, when need therefor arises, by orderly processes carried out in a spirit of mutual helpfulness and accommodation. We believe in respect by all nations for the rights of others and performance by all nations of established obligations. We stand for revitalizing and strengthening of international law. We believe in limitation and reduction of armament. We avoid entering into alliances or entangling commitments, but we believe in co-operative effort by peaceful and practicable means. We advocate steps toward promotion of economic security and stability the world over; we advocate lowering or removing of excessive barriers in international trade; we seek effective equality of commercial opportunity and we urge upon all nations application of the principle of equality of treatment.

50 Nations Back Ideal.

The Government of the United States is endeavoring to keep alive, strengthen and revitalize, in reference to all the world, these fundamental principles. The Department of State transmitted this statement of principles to all foreign governments and requested their comments. More than 50 governments placed themselves on record in support of these principles.

In harmony with these principles, the Government of the United States has embarked upon a course of action designed to make possible the expansion of our foreign trade which is necessary for a restoration of full domestic prosperity, and, at the same time, to promote peace and friendly relations among nations. The trade agreements act of June 12, 1934, conferred on the President for a period of three years the authority to enter into trade agreements with foreign countries, involving reciprocal reductions of excessive trade barriers; this authority was renewed for another three-year period by a joint resolution approved March 1, 1937. The act provides that the President shall seek "information and advice" from the Tariff Commission and the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, as well as from such other sources as he may deem appropriate. Before an agreement is concluded, interested persons submit briefs to a special committee, and make statements at open hearings. The Committee on Trade Agreements, composed of representatives of the various Government agencies named in the act, and of the Treasury Department, is responsible for formulating the draft texts of all trade agreements; these drafts and recommendations are submitted through the Secretary of State to the President for his approval. In the preparation of trade agreements, the Department of State drafts the general provisions, conducts the actual negotiations, and functions as the co-ordinating agency in the entire interdepartmental trade-agreements organization.

16 Trade Pacts Signed.

Trade agreements with 16 countries, including nine American republics, have already been negotiated; these countries in 1929 accounted for almost two-fifths of our total foreign trade. In addition, negotiations are now in progress with five more countries, among them the United Kingdom. These five countries, together with the other 16, accounted for about 55 per cent of our total exports in 1929 and about 48 per cent of our total imports.

The immediate task under the trade-agreements program has been to bring about a lessening of the excessive barriers to international trade which had sprung up during the depression. Each of the agreements (except the special agreement with Cuba) includes a provision guaranteeing the unconditional application of the most-favored-nation principle, which means that our exports to each of the countries concerned will automatically receive as favorable treatment as is accorded to the goods of any third country. Our trade is thus freed from the constant menace of destructive discrimination; in return, we undertake to accord similar treatment to the goods coming to us from the other country concerned.

Important as are the immediate benefits of the trade-agreements program in rebuilding on a mutually advantageous basis our foreign trade and the foreign trade of other countries, that program has another and possibly even greater significance. We are contributing to leadership in a movement which may have a decisive influence on the whole future course of civilization—a movement away from international strife and toward general appeasement. Prosperity and peace go hand in hand; to promote one is to promote the other. The economic well-being of the people is the greatest single protection against social unrest, civil strife, and war. The trade-agreements program is a standing offer to other nations to join with us in a determined effort to promote economic appeasement and security; it is an indispensable part of our comprehensive program designed to promote in our country stable and sustained economic prosperity and to assure for our Nation a condition of durable peace.

In the relations of the United States with the American republics, five years of the good-neighbor policy have produced significant results. We voluntarily renounced our right of intervention in Cuba by abrogating the Platt amendment. We withdrew our marines who had been stationed in Haiti. At the Montevideo Conference in 1933 we signed a convention condemning intervention in the internal or external affairs of other nations. We have sought to make effective the principles of liberal and equitable trade policies unanimously approved at the Montevideo Conference.

U. S. Took Initiative.

We took the initiative in suggesting the convocation of the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, which was held at Buenos Aires during December, 1936, to give permanent effect to the growing friendship and confidence among the American republics. At this conference the republics affirmed the principles which are henceforth to guide their relations. There was perfected a mechanism for the avoidance and settlement of disputes which might disturb their peaceful relations and for consultation in the event that the peace of the Western Hemisphere is menaced. The 21 American republics joined in the following declaration:

"That every act susceptible of disturbing the peace of America affects each and every one of them, and justifies the initiation of the procedure of consultation provided for in the Convention for the Maintenance, Preservation and Re-establishment of Peace, executed at this conference."

In June, 1935, the United States participated with five other American republics in successfully mediating and bringing about a termination of the Chaco War between Bolivia and Paraguay, and the United States is participating actively in negotiations now in progress at the Chaco Peace Conference in Buenos Aires looking toward the signing of a definitive peace treaty. In October, 1937, this Government joined with the governments of Costa Rica and Venezuela in the extension of good offices to Honduras and Nicaragua with reference to a boundary dispute which had arisen between them; and these good offices led to the signature two months later of an agreement designed to bring about a definitive settlement of the controversy. At the instance of the government of Haiti, the governments of Cuba, Mexico and the United States extended in November, 1937, their good offices to Haiti and the Dominican Republic in connection with a dispute resulting from the death of certain Haitian citizens in the Dominican Republic. Subsequently, at the suggestion of the three inviting governments, Haiti invoked the applicable inter-American peace machinery, and in January, 1938, a mutually satisfactory agreement was reached between the disputant governments, within the framework of that machinery.

The problem of limitation and reduction of armament has had the constant attention of this Administration. One of the first acts of this Administration in the foreign field was an endeavor to bolster the General Disarmament Conference which was in session at Geneva. Thereafter, for many months the Government made every feasible effort to bring about at Geneva an international agreement on the limitation and reduction of armament, and a further agreement for the supervision and control of the international traffic in arms. We also participated in the London Naval Conference of 1935-1936. Although the conference did not produce a treaty for the quantitative limitation of armament, the resulting London Naval Treaty of 1936, which has provided for the crystallization of navies in established types and for advance notification of naval programs and exchange of information.

This Government has often reiterated our readiness to join with other nations in a common effort to bring about a general limitation and reduction of armament. But in a world in which increased construction of armaments is a regrettable fact, we are compelled to render adequate our military and naval establishment.

During recent years the Department of State has been confronted with tremendous problems arising from civil and international conflicts in certain parts of the world. In the handling of these problems, this Government has scrupulously adhered to the fundamental principle of neutrality; it has followed a policy of noninvolvement and nonparticipation in conflicts within and between other nations.

New Offices Created.

Additional duties of the Department of State during the past five years have necessitated the creation of new offices within the department. The duties of the department relating to the international traffic in arms have increased in volume and complexity during recent years; with the passage of the neutrality act of 1935, the new duties and responsibilities devolving upon the department as a result of that act made necessary the creation of an Office of Arms and Munitions Control. An Office of Philippine Affairs has been established to deal with various economic, political, immigration, and other problems arising under the terms of the Philippine independence act of 1934. A Division of Trade Agreements has been created to carry out the provisions of the trade agreements act, so far as they relate to the Department of State.

A brief outline of functions of the department should include mention of the work involved in the consideration and settlement of a wide variety of problems which arise from day to day in the relations between our Government and foreign governments; in extending protection to American citizens and American interests in all parts of the world; in negotiating treaties designed to protect our citizens in the enjoyment of their rights and privileges abroad; in the reporting of opportunities for the sale of our products in foreign countries; in carrying on various functions connected with the immigration of aliens to the United States and the issuing of passports to American citizens; in dealing with increasingly important international problems relating to radio and aviation; and in the participation in international organizations and conferences.

The functions of the Department of State are carried out by its staff at Washington, and by the Foreign Service of the United States, which functions under the department, in some 350 foreign capitals and commercial centers. The cost to the Nation of maintaining the Department of State and the Foreign Service for the current fiscal year is less than one-fifth of 1 per cent of our Federal budget, an amount which is infinitesimal in comparison with the contribution made by the Department of State and the Foreign Service to the safeguarding and promotion of the interests and welfare of the people of the United States.

Cole Porter Musical Scores On First Night in New Haven

Musical Comedy, Coming Later to Capital, Turns Patrons Away at Premiere; Will Mahoney to Marry; News Notes of the Theater and Its People.

HOW do you mean, "You Never Know?" Now you can. The new Cole Porter musical comedy, featuring in its cast such stage and screen notables as Clifton Webb, Lupe Velez, Libby Holman and Toby Wing, opened in New Haven last night to a completely sold out house.

As a matter of fact, the bulletin that is sent me by Claude P. Greneker, a personal caller only a day or two ago, states that there are no seats left for any performance during the remainder of the New Haven engagement, which runs through tomorrow.

BELL.

The score of the new work is reported to be in Mr. Porter's best musical vein, and that is a very superlative vein, indeed. It amounts almost to an artery. Among the song hits that Washington may anticipate for the week of March 21, at the National, are "From Alpha to Omega," "What Shall I Do?" "For No Rhyme or Reason," "At Long Last Love" and "The Cafe Society Set."

The book, in case you are curious, dramatized by Rowland Leigh, who also directed the piece, deals with the amorous problems of two servants who pose as master and mistress of an important social establishment. It is Clifton Webb who is the valet and Senorita Velez who impersonates the maid. The real heads of the house are played by Rex O'Malley and Libby Holman.

Something to look forward to. And, as I have said before, never use a preposition to end a sentence with!

The boys and girls are making almost too much fuss over this "Battle of Swing," that is to be staged at the Earle Theater, beginning today. First there came a westernunion from our old pal, Don Bestor, reading as follows:

"No matter what Rita Rio promises, when the 'Battle of Swing' starts Friday, I'll Bestor (Ouch!). (Signed) DON BESTOR."

Then came the one from Rita, thus:

"When the 'Battle of Swing' starts Friday at the Earle, I'll spot Bestor two violins and a saxophone and still outswing him.

(Signed) RITA RIO."

To reverse the order, these two wires come along today, the first from Rita and the second from Don:

"I'll admit Don has one of the best bands on the air, but wait until you see my streamlined sweethearts of swing on the Earle stage tomorrow."

"It's dollars to quarter-notes that you are in for a real battle on the Earle stage tomorrow. My boys are ready with plenty of surprises in swing that will amaze even Rita Rio."

And on top of all that waste of telegraph money, what comes along to the desk but a miniature snare drum and a pair of diminutive drumsticks, calculated to convey the idea of syncopation, no doubt, and shatter ear drums of anybody whose household becomes afflicted with the gadget. That would be one of my office mates again against whom I have held a grudge for years. I've given it to him for his small son.

And that isn't all. Yesterday, close on the heels of the drum and the sticks, arrived a full-edged baton to whip over the quivering heads of any group of temperamental musicians. This was referred to my esteemed office-mate, Ray C. B. Brown, music editor of The Post. In self-defense we have about decided to organize our own orchestra and show up Dr. Kindler!

I somehow feel that Dr. Kindler isn't too much worried.

I hesitate to revert again to the mileage between La Guayra, Venezuela, and Caracas, but after a brief confab with Dr. Archie D. Engel, who just returned to town from the trip, and another letter fro mMr. Groesbeck, who also has made it, I am beginning to see what I perhaps fatuously construe to be the light.

They have changed that road from the seaport to the Capital. When I was there, there was no handsomely paved boulevard for autos. That long ago, to be frank about it, there were no autos. To get from La Guayra to Caracas one had, perforce, to travel the narrow-guage railroad. That railroad wound twice around a single mountain and wasted a lot of additional time by taking detours that now, I mistrust, have been straightened out. Not that it matters, but I always liked geography!

There is a new romance about to be consummated in the theater. Will Mahoney, one of the greatest of the tap dancers, who finally discovered how to play a xylophone with his syncopating pedals, is soon to take unto himself a bride, as the saying goes. The bride, in England, will be Evelyn Hayes. That probably will mean nothing to you until you have been reminded. Evelyn Hayes was one of the dancers who made a first appearance here, on the stage at Loew's Capitol, then known by its maiden name of The Fox, as one of the decorations of the Georges Carpentier act, when the "orchid man" of the ring conceived himself to be a song-and-dance fellow, rather than a fisticuffer. Miss Hayes' mother, Mrs. Eva Hayes, still lives in Washington. Her daughter has gone on a bit. Journeying to England on more or less of a hunch, she has done pretty well for herself. Perhaps the best evidence of this is that she is to become the wife of Will Mahoney.

In yesterday's recital of the giddy whirl that constitutes the life of a drama desk, dedicated to the proposition that "you go so many places and meet so many interesting people," by some strange error of omission, no mention was made of the Wednesday luncheon at the Washington in honor of Harry Anger, in charge of production of stage shows at the Earle Theater. Mr. Anger is a jovial chap who has a considerable job on his hands. It is his task to weld a diversified list of vaudeville acts into a closely woven "production." The "acts" don't like this any too well. It submerges their individual identities and robs them of a few bows that they might otherwise receive. But it all makes for infinitely improved entertainment for the cash customers who pay the appointed price at the ticket wicket. Harry is doing a fine job. More power to him. And more to the "acts," too, if they can outtalk him! Which I very much doubt.

It was a great tribute that the theatergoing public of Washington paid to the memory of Rudolf Valentino, at the Rialto Theater Wednesday night, when the Film Society of Washington presented "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." The ample capacity of the Rialto was inadequate to accommodate the crowd. Thousands were turned away.

If you must know, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by the measure of present-day standards, is not too hot a film. It creaks with age. But it doesn't creak at the box office. So great was the response to the appeal of a fabulous film personality that the picture will be repeated on March 23.

Olivia de Havilland admitted recently after socking Patrick Knowles and knocking him down for a scene in "Four's a Crowd," that she could dish it out but she couldn't take it.

Olivia retired to her dressing room after the epochal punch and fainted. Only twice before in her life had she fainted, and that was when she came out of the surgery after watching an operation.

Knowles' jaw, which had been the target of numerous punches during rehearsals and "takes," swelled under the frequent impacts. Ice bags were applied to reduce the swelling.

In Hollywood With HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Calif., March 3.—For months they've been planning the guillotine scene for Norma Shearer. It will be as gruesome and realistic—but not quite as final as the real one which took place some years back in France.

HEDDA HOPPER.

But "Marie Antoinette" isn't the only one losing her head at that studio. The ax has been swinging in all directions. We all know that things are in a horrible mess. Call it recession, panic, what you will—not one of us can escape the blame. But in this hour of need, it's well to stop and remember to—"Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." And I don't pretend to be an old psalm singing so-and-so, either.

I never fail to get a kick out of conservative people who get out of their natural groove and into motion pitcure work. I'm forever asking, just like Baby Snooks: "Why? But why?"

One of these is Lillian Deighton, who just got program credit for her beautiful work in "Tom Sawyer." She told me her story and it impressed me so that I'm passing it on to you.

Upon graduating from an Eastern college, she got her first teacher's job in Philadelphia. Married. Had a baby daughter and moved to Portland. After matrimony failed she became principal in a Portland school. While singing a lullaby to her little girl, the child went to sleep—forever. A leakage in the heart which had never been noticed.

Too heartbroken to go back to teaching little children, she came on to California to forget. Took a job as hostess. Worked up until she became assistant buyer in a local store. All this time she had a desire to write.

At this point an opportunity in the wardrobe department at Metro came along. At least that got her inside a studio. From there she became a reader and was asked to do a treatment of a story. But before she could finish it the producers lost interest and the story was dropped.

Mrs. Deighton finally landed in the research department as one of the underlings. Two years ago, David Selznick signed her to create his research department. Now, I understand M.-G.-M. would like her back to reorganize their entire department. It is as empty as Romeo and Juliet's tomb now.

You'll be as delighted as I was to hear that Edna May Oliver is about to go on the air with her own program, in a marvelous idea which I'll tell you about later. The cry that movies killed the drama is turning into radio threatens screen. It's grown louder since radio interests started building million dollar skyscrapers on Sunset boulevard. They are going up on the same spot our first studios stood.

Aviation Turns Back the Years In Screen Play

By Frederick C. Othman.

Van Nuys, Calif., March 3 (U.P.).—The men with wings—and what wings!—prepared today to spray the clouds with liquid fire and fly for the glory of Hollywood.

For six weeks Director William Wellman has waited for a chance to shoot the aviation sequences of his aerial cavalcade, "Men With Wings." He has to have sunlight and he also needs clouds. For days on end it poured rain. Then would come a clear blue sky. Wellman must work with a movie of an airplane flying with clouds in the background, else the plane looks as if its standing still.

The clouds must be perfect. Likewise the sunlight. Being re-enacted—only bigger and better than the real thing—will be one of the aerial fracases of the World War.

Life Was Cheap in 1916.

In a line in front of the hangars at the airport here in the San Fernando Valley seven German Fokker planes of the vintage of 1916 will stand and beside them seven men who seemed not to care a whit for their lives to fly 'em. The ships look as if they were ready momentarily to fall into small pieces. (Studio experts insisted they were in better condition than when they were raining death for the kaiser.)

One of the planes has to burst into flames in midair and spiral to earth. This would be tough on Frank Clark, its wartime pilot. It probably would kill him.

Crimson and Black.

The ship, therefore, is equipped with two tanks. One contains black smoke under pressure. The other holds 50 gallons of crimson-colored carbon tetrachloride, the noninflammable dry-cleaning fluid.

When time comes for Clark to die for the fatherland, the plane must be several thousand feet high. He pushes a button and the red liquid spurts into the sunlight, like tongues of flame. The smoke mingles with it, and the illusion of death in the air is perfect.

You will see a close-up of the ship in the air, with Clark fighting frantically to save his life. It isn't to be done with mirrors, either. Wellman will send up a camera plane, with a big blue Technicolor camera bolted to the fuselage.

History of Aviation.

The story covers the whole history of aviation, from the initial flight at Kitty Hawk, N. C., by the Wrights.

Players include Fred MacMurray, Ray Milland, Louise Campbell and Andy Devine, but they won't have any work to do until, and if, the famed California climate begins to co-operate with the sun.

The picture is budgeted at $1,800,000, but unless the weather begins consistently to obey the promises of the chamber of commerce, Wellman fears even that almost fantastic sum won't be enough.

Brent's Ambition.

Evelyn Brent, who portrays an important role in "Tip-Off Girls," became a star in motion pictures during the silent film days in spite of the fact that her real ambition was to become a school teacher. She was attending a teachers' normal school when signed for the screen.

Music With Action.

For the first time in the history of Hollywood pictures, a musical is being made in which music is synchronized with the story in such a way that at not one point does it hold up the dramatic action. The film is "Stolen Heaven," costarring Gene Raymond and Olympe (O-Lamp) Bradna.

Profit Tax Foes To Ask Redraft By Committee

Taxes

to the bill, which will go to a final showdown Wednesday. At that time, one motion to recommit the bill is permitted under the rules.

Traditionally, the Republican minority frames that motion, and Treadway said last night it probably will demand complete repeal of the undivided profits tax section. Democratic opponents of the so-called "third basket" penalty levy are willing to sponsor a recommit motion based on the penalty section, believing they can muster a House majority.

G. O. P. Won't Yield.

But Republicans were reluctant to yield.

"I think we will make the motion, on repeal of the undivided profits tax," Treadway said last night. "If that is adopted, the penalty on closely held corporations automatically would go out, as it depends on dividends distributed."

Doughton was the first to take the floor yesterday as the bill began its course through the House. He discussed the general provisions of the measure, proposed modification of the undivided profits tax to ease the burden on business and provisions for more gradual step-down of the capital gains tax to accelerate the turnover of capital assets.

"I am certain if the bill is enacted into law our revenue will be vastly improved as to equity and certainty," said Doughton. "The tax burden will be more fairly distributed and business will be stimulated and encouraged."

Doughton replied to charges made by witnesses appearing before the Ways and Means Committee that the undivided profits tax has been "disastrous," that business has been prevented from financing expansion programs, and that many corporations find it impossible to secure working capital and continue in business.

Hardship Denied.

"That was completely demonstrated not to be so in the case of those appearing during the hearings, or those brought here to give some semblance of such being the case," he said. "During the hearings, not a single case of undue hardship was established."

Although continuance of Federal revenue at approximately present levels was a committee goal, Representative Vinson told the House the bill will produce about $5,300,000,000, or around $22,000,000 less than existing law. Vinson devoted much of his statement to a defense of "Title 1B," carrying the "closely held" penalty proviso, most vulnerable provision of the bill. His speech won tributes from Republicans who followed him. Representative Daniel A. Reed (Republican), New York, called it "the artistic accomplishment of a great advocate."

Minority Attack Pressed.

Then Reed carried forward the minority attack on the bill, which, he said, foreboded "disaster to business and suffering to labor." Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, interrupted him to charge Republicans were accorded no part in framing the measure. When leaders replied that few Republicans attended the final sessions to which they were invited, Knutson retorted: "We didn't want to waste our time watching the committee drive another peg into the coffin of American industry."

Spearhead of the minority attack on the bill was Representative Treadway. He declared President Roosevelt's insistence that the undivided profits tax principle be continued "runs contrary to almost universal opinion among reputable tax authorities."

"No disinterested expert body which has considered the present bill has indorsed it," said Treadway. "On the contrary, such eminent nonpartisan research organizations as the Brookings Institution, the Twentieth Century Fund, and the National Bureau of Economic Research are unanimous in demanding outright and unconditional repeal of the undivided profits tax."

The Massachusetts Republican said Democrats "are fooling only themselves when they try to tell the country that a measure carrying so many obstacles to business recovery as are contained in the present bill will be accepted by the business community as a signal to begin normal operations."

Only One Witness.

Treadway said only one witness appeared before the committee in support of the bill, Undersecretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill, who, he said, "practically dictated" the provisions.

"This bill," said Treadway, "will result in higher taxes for many corporations, both large and small, and the majority themselves admit in their report that the total revenues under the new proposals will not be reduced under those gathered in by the 1936 law. On the other hand, there is good reason to believe that the proposed bill involves an actual increase in the total tax burden."

He said the "only argument advanced seriously in favor of the new bill is that it is preferable to the present law. This is faint praise indeed."

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart.

WPA Case.

Hearings are being held, in broken doses, these days, on the five-month-old case of Bernard Greenberg, one-time WPA'er who was given the air allegedly for union activity. The hearings are presided over by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, a director of the department of sociology at Catholic University and a member of the WPA Labor Policies Board. In this case, however, Father Haas is acting in a private capacity, rather than as a member of WPA officialdom.

The background: The union's charges (U. F. W. A.) arose from the dismissal of Greenberg and Mary Gresham last October. The union alleged union discrimination. Miss Gresham was reinstated, with back pay, in November. The Greenberg case was taken to Acting Administrator Aubrey Williams, whose decision against reinstatement was unsatisfactory to the union. Accordingly, the WPA proposed Father Haas as arbitrator. The hearings, held in the Walker-Johnson Building, are open to the public.

The other open hearings here—that of the Social Security Board versus the State of Oklahoma—was conspicuous by the small attendance of the public . . . There was a first-rate trial, with a State in the defendant's dock . . . And aside from the final decision, when the Government wrote plainly its disfavor of "monkey-business" in all its forms—one point emerged that might be turned into a talking point for the civil service advocates: Often, all too often, came the plaint that the fault was seated in untrained personnel; that the meddling of the professional politicians hamstrung all attempts at a satisfactory administration of SSB in Oklahoma.

Things you may have overlooked entirely, but which impressed us no end: The fact that those efficient people at the zoo never have named a successor for Soko the Chimpanzee, the beast that for a quarter century would pound the bars when the first premonition of spring came to the land. The primitive will to be loose always seized him; Soko reacted to strange seasonal currents, long before man knew, by his calendars, that spring was returning. Maybe they haven't another such arbiter out there now.

The fact that coyotes (according to National Park Service naturalists) are better mousers than the cat. "Its keen sense of hearing and sight, together with quickness of movement—and perhaps the fact that it is able to look down on its quarry with a better perspective than the feline—are the reasons for this excellence."

That wild geese, as well as aviators, lose their bearing in a fog—despite William Cullen Bryant's tribute a wild thing's sense of direction. The Government's people in the Great Smoky National Park have written in of a large flock of geese which settled on a creek in the park area. "Evidently they had been lost in the fog. They remained for about an hour on the stream before taking off again." Which is a much quicker take-off than most men register after settling down in their own fogs.

Add Vain Are the Glories Department: Last week, with an esthetic tear, we noted that the FCA Lending Library had placed on sale an assortment of books (on which authors had labored and wooed the Muses' skirts) at such solemn prices as 50 cents or three for $1. Now the prices have been reduced to 25 cents, to the abject degradation of art and the Bronx cheering of many an author's hope.

Reardon, of Tomah, Wis., comes to a position in the finance and research division of FCA . . . Dr. Hugh L. Dryden, chief, division of mechanics and sound, Bureau of Standards, addressed the regular chapter meeting of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians at the U. F. W. A. headquarters last night. Dr. Dryden is in charge of research in connection with low-cost housing. The FAECT is holding six lectures on housing . . . Administrator Frank T. Hines states his attitude about the big building at Vermont avenue between H and I northwest: "All of us realize, I feel sure, that the Veterans Administration was brought into being, and exists, as an agency of Government to render service, where service is due to others—and not merely as a place to work. In other words, it is not just a place to have a Government job."

3 Children Die in Fire As Sister Runs for Aid

Danville, Ky., March 3 (AP).—Cora Lee Cheatham, 6, ran to the home of a neighbor today to tell her mother a younger brother had set a mattress afire in the Cheatham tenant home near here. The mother, Mrs. Nolan Cheatham, rushed home to find the dwelling in flames. In it perished three of her children: William, 4, Mildred, 2, and Robert, 9 months.

be adequate annual income; that working conditions should be safe and healthy, and that child labor be eliminated from industry.

"There is ample and concrete evidence over these years, and particularly since 1933, of honest effort to promote the welfare of our wage earners through the adoption of a progressive, humane and far-sighted program. Included in it is the social security act, intended to safeguard workers against the major hazards of life, and the national labor relations act, which defines the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively.

"Out of this program upon which we are now embarked will come far-reaching benefits; not only to wage earners, but to all our people in the years to come. In helping to carry it out the Department of Labor will continue its great service in the interest of the men and women who work for a living, and thus discharge its duty. The wage earners of the United States may well be proud of what the Department of Labor has done for them in its quarter century of existence and what it is destined to do for them in the future."

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

A few sentimental Washingtonians are agog at the prospect of a White House baby—the first in 50 years... They assert confidently that the baby of the young Franklin Roosevelts—grandchild of the Roosevelts and the duPonts—will be born in the White House.

• • • •

If so, it will be the first in almost 50 years; the last two were, I think, the Princess Cantacuzene, granddaughter of President Grant, and Cleveland's daughter Esther. August is warmish in Washington; but the White House is partially air-conditioned.

• • • •

Spy scare or no spy scare German and Jap scribes are present when the President or other officials are asked questions about warships vs. airplanes at press confabs and hearings.

• • • •

IN SOLONS' SALONS: Washington's keen sense of rumor avers that one Cabinet member would resign and relax if his wife didn't like official life so much... It's a 100 to 1 shot that no present member of Congress will ever be President; and the odds against any individual Senator are around 1,000 to 1.

"—wings over the White House."

There's so much free oratorical talent floating around the Capital that the big banquets drag on and on, rarely ending before midnight ... Usually it's after 11 p. m. before the principal speaker rises ... Once President Roosevelt sat from 7 o'clock until 11:35 before he was permitted to speak his piece. There's strong sentiment for a 10:30 windup.

• • • •

SIR CHARLES ROSS.

This ruddy Scottish baronet is one of the Capital's favorite mystery men ... Inventor of the Ross rifle, a British subject (once he hastened home to settle a $400,000 income levy) he lives in a large house near Dupont Circle, where Western Senators are his most conspicuous guests ... Once his trans-Atlantic phone bill was reputed to be $800 a month; it's much less now ... His position is unofficial, but mere gossip hath it that he tipped the British foreign office that in case of European war, American supplies would continue to flow to England via Canada—because the Supreme Court ruled in another case that a treaty (like the Canadian trade treaty) supersedes domestic law (like the war embargo act) ... It's gossip like this that makes mystery men like Sir Charles ... At any rate, he's head of Clan Ross in America.

• • • •

Great hostesses were much annoyed formerly because some private girls' schools in Washington held out to parents the extra attraction that the schoolgirls would be taken to diplomatic and cabinet receptions ... The way they plowed through the iced cakes was a caution; they had a sort of semigate-crasher status ... Now only the more gilded of the prep school girls go to the flossy official parties, and rarely.

"—ahead of Scotland Yard."

If an American Conan Doyle were to emerge from the battalions of detective story writers, he might give Edgar Hoover's G-Men their place in the sun, a notch above the traditional man-hunters ... The esprit-de-corps around the Federal Bureau of Investigation is now so high that Scotland Yard and the Northwest Mounted seem just a posse of country constables in comparison.

• • • •

One of the stories floating around the Hill is about a businessman who thought he had a plausible chance for a Government loan ... He told his Congressman that he was obliged to make 22 trips to Washington and New York (at a cost of $2,000) to borrow $80,000 on $160,000 worth of collateral—and hasn't got the loan yet. Sounds fishy.

• • • •

CAPITAL CAPERS: Occasionally one of the Capital's gentlefolk complains to her Senator or some other official that she hasn't been invited to some glamorous diplomatic function, and asks him to phone the embassy or legation and arrange it for her ... Unimportant coincidence: In Washington the pillars of the White House are visible from the curb of the Soviet Embassy, and in Moscow the American Embassy is across the street from the Kremlin ... Best shot of the week: Lovely Lillian Gish coddling shy Theodore Dreiser and kissing old ladies at a Senate hearing on the arts.

Woman Found Shot.

Caroline Smith, 24, colored, was found last night on the floor in her home at 800½ Twenty-fourth street northwest with a bullet in her temple. Detective Sergeants Michael Mahaney and William Christian arrested for investigation John Bussey, 40, also colored, of the same address.

First Sister to Become a Doctor Sails for Hospital Post in India

Dr. Helen Lalinsky, Society of Catholic Medical Missionaries, the first sister to complete a full course of medical study after entering religious life, who sailed for India yesterday. She will be stationed at the Holy Family Hospital, Rawalpindi.

Dr. Helen Lalinsky (Sister Alma), Society of Catholic Medical Missionaries, the first sister to have gone through the complete course of medical study after entering religious life, sailed yesterday for India, where she will be stationed at the Holy Family Hospital, Royalpindi.

At the same time Sister M. Bernard, S. C. M. M., embarked for the Medical Mission House in Osterley, London, where she will be engaged in work of the Society in England and Europe.

Until recent years the church did not allow religious women to engage in surgical and obstetrical work without special dispensation. In 1935 the Pope issued an instruction urging foundation of new religious orders of women to do medical, surgical and obstetrical work in the mission fields.

Dr. Lalinsky is a native of Canton, Ohio, who entered the community in 1927 and after her religious profession took up premedical studies at Trinity College, in Washington. In 1932 she entered Women's Medical College, Philadelphia, and while there was elected to the Alpha Omega Alpha Medical Association for outstanding scholarship.

After receiving her degree of doctor of medicine she interned at Misericordia Hospital, Philadelphia. Since, September, 1936, she has studied in the surgical and gynecological departments at Georgetown University Hospital, here.

The Society described it as a "happy event" to be able to increase the staff by one of its own doctors. Departure ceremonies were held Tuesday in the chapel of the motherhouse, at Brookland.

Citizens' Conference Approves D. C. Relief Inquiry by Senate

Northeast Group Favors Local Residents on Committee.

The proposed senatorial inquiry into the District's relief situation was approved last night by the Northeast Conference of Citizens Associations, with the added recommendation that District residents be represented on the investigating committee.

On the motion of George J. Cleary, of the Trinidad Association, the conference urged legislation providing for punishment of persons who fraudulently accept relief funds.

Kenneth P. Armstrong, of Burroughs, and J. J. Hurley, of Michigan Park, were named members of a committee to investigate "more equitable" methods of assessing District residents for street improvements.

Tributes were paid to J. W. Barse, 85-year-old member of the Lincoln Park Association, who has been active in civic work in the District for more than 30 years. He was applauded at last night's meeting as an "inspiration to young and old."

Marvin McLean, of Brookland, was chairman of the conference, which was held at the Twelfth Precinct Station.

Sanitation Protested.

A motion protesting to the Health Department sanitary conditions in their area was passed last night by the Washington Highlands Citizens Association. The group also opposed paving conditions on certain streets.

A resolution was adopted praising the city-wide antisyphilis campaign. Mrs. Mildred Riley was named to conduct a survey of bus service to the community.

Citizens Score Relief For 'Aliens, Floaters'

Municipal assistance to "aliens, transients, floaters, vagrants and non-bona fide residents of the District" was opposed last night by the Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association, in a resolution recommending a three-year District residence requirement for eligibility for relief.

In the same resolution, the association advocated a four-year residence requirement for relief administrators, supervisors and case workers, to replace "the largge number of salary-grabbers from the hinterlands that now prevails."

Papers of Dead Man Used to Pass Bad Checks Here

The dead came back to plague police yesterday.

Members of the check squad were mystified for a while when a shoe company reported a man representing himself as "William R. Payne," and identifying himself by a motor vehicle permit and registration, had given a worthless check. Investigation showed a trail of similar checks.

Police checked up on "William R. Payne," and found that a man by that name died at Gallinger Hospital from tuberculosis not quite a year ago. His mother, looking over his effects, noticed his permit and car registration were missing, but did not report the loss, believing them valueless. Police are convinced they were stolen from the hospital.

District Y.M.C.A. Club Quizzes Speakers on N. Y. Broadcast

Although more than 200 miles separated them from the speakers, members of the Washington Y. M. C. A. Town Hall Discussion Club last night questioned Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, and Howard Bruce, banker-industrialist of Baltimore, after they had spoken in New York in the broadcast of "America's Town Meeting of the Air," from Town Hall. The Y. M. C. A. group listened in here at the studios of radio station WMAL and afterward asked questions via the air. The answers also were broadcast.

Senator Pepper and Mr. Bruce had as their subject, "Which Way Out of the Recession?"

Questions were propounded by five members of the regular "Y" Town Hall Discussion Club committee, which included Edward T. Thayer, chairman, who presided at the meeting here; Herbert Costain, George Bidwell, Stanley Chin and Julius Ritter, assisted by Luther Herman and John Eaton.

After the broadcast, a discussion was held by the local group with whom Dr. Bernard Gabine, of the Brookings Institution; Sylvester Garrett, of the National Labor Relations Board; the Rev. Dr. Everett H. Jones, canon of the Washington Cathedral; Dr. Alfred Cahen, statistical expert, and Lyle O'Rourke, Washington attorney.

The Y. M. C. A. Town Hall Discussion Club was organized last fall by Costain, who is a Y. M. C. A. secretary. The club has been using the broacast material of "America's Town Meeting of the Air" as a basis for their own meetings. Last night, however, was the first time the local group had taken part actively in the actual broadcast.

Group Health And Doctors End Impasse

Columbia Chief Ready to Accede to Plan, He Tells Parley.

Symposium on Problem Held With Hospital Authorities.

The apparent deadlock between HOLC's Group Health Association and the medical profession in Washington was broken last night when Col. P. M. Ashburn, president of the Association of Hospital Superintendents of the District and superintendent of Columbia Hospital, told a conference of the G. H. A. and hospital superintendents that his institution was ready to receive patients under their own group physician.

He added, however, that the board of trustees had taken no definite action, and that no group obstetrician was on the staff of the hospital. Such a physician, he said, would be extended privileges and facilities of the hospital if he were thoroughly approved.

Since Columbia Hospital handles almost nothing but obstetrical cases, his view was regarded as significant by members of the group, who held a symposium with several widely known hospital officials at the Interstate Commerce Commission offices last night.

First Concession Here.

Dr. Ashburn's statement was the first concession of its kind made by a hospital here.

Numerous members of the group have been hospitalized in the District, but the association has had to pay both the bill of its own physician and that of the hospital physician attending the case, a practice which would cripple it financially if it were continued.

The meeting was closed, but it was learned that Col. Ashburn was accompanied by a member of his board of trustees. It was understood that any association obstetrician who might be accorded privileges of the hospital for group cases must be of the highest standing in the medical profession, and probably a member of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. The working plan still is formative, it was added.

Other medical authorities participating in the symposium included Dr. Joseph Wall, chief of the medical staff of Children's Hospital; Dr. Robert Young, of Casualty Hospital; Dr. Frank E. Duehring, of Georgetown University Hospital, and Dr. Valentine Hess, of Providence Hospital. Superintendents and officials of other hospitals, invited to attend, did not, because of the short notice given.

Among the theories advanced was the one which held that any patient should have the choice of several physicians. Unofficially, the association was considering offering each patient who is forced to go from the group to a hospital the choice of two physicians, probably specialists in the operation or sort of treatment he requires.

Friendly Note Stressed.

Officials of hospitals who attended the gathering seemed interested in finding out all they could about G. H. A., it was learned. They discussed mutual problems from the floor, and asked and answered questions.

At the beginning of the meeting, Ormond E. Lewis, vice president of the association, stated the purposes of the group and its difficulties.

"We approach the question in the friendliest possible way," he said, "and in the friendliest spirit."

He added that his organization wanted the advice and help of the hospitals.

In the course of the meetings the point was stressed by one of the physicians that the hospitals were private institutions, and as such "retained the right of sovereignty over the doctors they approve as staff members."

Horace Russell, of the G. H. A. board of trustees, stated that while the legality of the G. H. A. was pending in the courts, the organization was determined to go ahead.

Woman Foils Two D. C. Bandits by Slamming Door

Two colored men intent on robbery were foiled yesterday when Mrs. Annie Cohen, 1113 Eighth street northwest, slammed the door of her apartment in the would-be bandits' faces.

Police said the men knocked on the woman's door and when she came to the door, one, gun in hand, said, "Don't be frightened, lady, this is only a holdup."

Mrs. Cohen apparently took the tip. She slammed the door and called police, who are looking for two colored men of slender build, seen near the apartment by neighbors.

Green and Others Praise Labor Department As 1,200 at Dinner Mark 25th Anniversary

Senator Robert F. Wagner, author of the Labor Relations act, and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins at the Labor Department's twenty-fifth birthday celebration last night at the Mayflower.

Celebrating the twenty-fifth birthday of the newest Government department, 1,200 diners last night crowded the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel to hear high praise for past accomplishments of the Department of Labor and a challenge to wider service in the future.

Achievements of the department during its first quarter century were described by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, as a foundation for expansion of activity.

"We are looking forward," Green declared, "to the development of social security to provide against all of the hazards which interfered with gainful employment, including sickness."

The audience loudly applauded a statement by the A. F. of L. chief that the social administration of the social security act, "touching so intimately the matter of wage earners' welfare, should be in the Department of Labor."

Howard Sent by Lewis.

Preceding Green on the program, Charles P. Howard, C. I. O. secretary, and president of the International Typographical Union, affiliated with the A. F. of L., asserted that intensive labor organization is the only solution for present economic maladjustment.

Faultlessly attired in white tie and tails, Howard warned that "Labor must be on guard against some who pose as friends as well as those who give open opposition."

"Labor must create within its organization the power to reduce hours to a point where all may have a job; it must establish a wage at the highest figure industry can pay and remain solvent.

"Labor must discipline itself and make constructive use of the power it develops," he concluded.

Howard was delegated to attend the banquet by John L. Lewis, who had previously notified Secretary Perkins he would not be present.

Opening the program, Miss Perkins read a message from President Roosevelt in which he cited "general recognition that there should be a floor to wages and a ceiling to hours, that there should be adequate national income, that working conditions should be safe and healthy and that child labor be eliminated from industry."

Aid Is Pledged.

Keynote of the Secretary of Labor's remarks was the pledge that "We must keep this department dedicated to human beings."

In approaching the complex problems facing the department, Miss Perkins said, "we will invite cooperation of the great employer groups and the great scientific groups, at the same time continuing our long association with organized labor."

Arriving at the ballroom during Miss Perkins' speech, Mrs. Roosevelt unobtrusively seated herself on the crowded steps leading down from the lobby and then received an enthusiastic ovation when she advanced to the platform at the conclusion of the Secretary's address.

CHARLES P. HOWARD, I. T. U. president and C. I. O. secretary.

Employer groups were represented on the program by Henry I. Harriman, former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, who stated his belief in labor's right to collective bargaining, through unions of its own choosing; fair wages, hours and working conditions, and the abolition of child labor.

Courts Praised.

Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, declared, "Our courts have recently thrown off the shackles of outworn constitutional doctrine, and left us free to concentrate our energies on all-important issues of policy and administration."

Past accomplishments may be jeopardized, he charged, by "destructive amendment during temporary periods of reaction. We must never again embrace the outmoded dogma, however disguised, that the helpless should help themselves."

Climaxing the program, members of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union presented a condensed version of their current Broadway hit, "Pins and Needles."

Taking the stage at the Mayflower after a "command performance" in the East room of the White House earlier in the evening, the cast of "the first labor revue" found another appreciative audience for such melodies as "One Big Union for Two," "Vassar Girl Finds a Job" and "Sing Us a Song of Social Significance."

Omitted from both the White House and Mayflower performances were the sketches, "Federal Theater Ploughed Under" and "Four Little Angels of Peace," depicting Hitler, Mussolini, Eden and a Japanese statesman.

Further entertainment was furnished by Armand Tokatyan, of the Metropolitan Opera Co. and American Guild of Musical Artists, who sang several operatic selections and then delighted his audience by swinging from a classic aria into "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen."

Man Hurt in Fall In 1937 Dies Here

Police last night were investigating the death of Lee Nelson, colored, 49, 912 Third street southwest, whose death three days ago may have been due to a traffic accident.

Nelson was injured two days before Christmas when he fell to the ground from a moving truck at Fourth and T streets northeast. He was treated at Freedmen's Hospital and sent home, and admitted to Emergency the same day.

Laymen Rule City's Health, White Avers

Ex-Tuberculosis Leader Assails Supervision by Congress.

Blames High Death Rate on Lack of Free Hand for Officials.

Conditions under which the District Health Department is answerable to "a committee of laymen in Congress" were assailed last night by Dr. William C. White, past president of the Tuberculosis Association of the District, who spoke in the weekly Public Health Forum of Georgetown University.

Washington's high death rate from tuberculosis and other communicable diseases was attributed largely by Dr. White to neglect and the lack of proper understanding by these laymen in health matters. "A most excellent health officer and health department are struggling against great difficulties," he said, referring to Dr. George C. Ruhland.

Situation Difficult.

The fact that the Health Department is reportable to a group of laymen, Dr. White said, makes it more difficult for Washington to meet its health problems squarely than other cities. For the same reason, he said, "our tuberculosis laws are unchanged."

Washington's own physicians also came in for a share of blame from Dr. White for the city's high tuberculosis death rate. He said physicians of Washington "report only about one-half of the cases under their care."

"A Great Mistake."

Dr. White said it was "a great mistake" to remove the Tuberculosis Hospital from the city to the country. The inaccessibility of the Tuberculosis Hospital, now at Glenn Dale, Md., he explained, makes it more difficult to study the disease. New York City, in accordance with recognized methods of treatment, is building a $3,000,000 tuberculosis hospital in the midst of the city, he pointed out.

Despite the great advances made in conquering tuberculosis in the last 50 years, he said, the ratio of the death rate to new cases is just about the same.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Poses Problems of Her Father, Her Mother, Her Sisters, Her Sister-in-Law and Herself.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I wonder if you will help us. Everybody in our family circle seems to be a problem, and while we have often talked things over, we have not come to a solution. We should like to have an unbiased person's opinion. Let's begin with Dad. We pity him, for he is unable to work; but he stays at home, sits by mother when she sews or cooks or sweeps and talks, talks, talks. We children, who contribute to their support, come home in the evening to find mother in tears, almost in hysterics. How can we get Dad to stop talking? We don't want to be rude to him.

• • • •

The second problem is Mother. She is more of a trial, even, than Dad. She has been married for 40 years, is nearly 65, and has never learned to eat like other persons. She leans over the saucer of peas and shovels them into her mouth. She never serves others at table first. She never cleans her finger nails; never keeps her hair off her neck; and, worse yet, becomes very hurt and indignant if we arrange to see our friends in other homes instead of asking them to our own home.

• • • •

The third problem is my eldest sister. She has a large home, a car, maids and spends large sums on football games, fur coats and other luxuries. Her husband works for the State and does not have to pay rent, laundry bills or servants' salaries. My sister, of course, feels very smug and secure. She never offers mother a home there because she is afraid her husband would dislike living with mother.

• • • •

Still another problem is my eldest brother's wife. She is pretty, efficient and economical, but a spitfire and a trouble maker. All large families quarrel, but our family never stops quarreling and about three-fourths of these quarrels originate with some catty remark made by my sister-in-law.

• • • •

A second sister with a small daughter is yet another problem. This sister's husband left her, and we have taken the child to raise. My sister goes around her house looking like a scarecrow. I am very much ashamed of her. Her hair looks like an old worn-out broom on a smiling face. Her dresses fit her 160 pounds too tightly. All her front teeth are filled with gold and when she smiles—well, use your imagination. Her little girl is sickly, very untidy, has bad manners and looks like a little sick kitten all the time. I want to do things for her but mother always interferes. If I say to her, "Use your fork this way," mother immediately breaks in with, "Oh, leave her alone. The poor child is hungry. She ate no breakfast. Just let her eat like she wants——."

• • • •

Then, I am a problem to myself and to the family, too. I am 20 years old, and I want to get married but find it impossible to save money because so much of my salary goes toward making mother comfortable. I have spent large sums of money papering, painting, furnishing and renting places for mother and dad, but my sisters don't appreciate it. Should I leave them all and go to New York? I am a graduate nurse and have been offered a position there. However, the salary is less than I am getting now and if I went, I should not be able to contribute to my parents' support any longer. Mother doesn't want me to leave. Is her love for us selfish? Please tell me what you think. I want the whole family to see the answer.

NURSE.

What to Believe.

DEAR NURSE: Since it is "talk or bust" with the average shut-in of somewhat advanced years, and since he would probably talk aloud to himself if denied audience, I am inclined to believe there is no way on earth to get your father to "stop talking." And since what can not be cured must be endured, the best advice I can give your mother is to learn how to think her own thoughts while your father rambles on; to learn how to turn a figuratively deaf ear to his garrulity. She would not be the first woman who had learned to protect her nervous system by such a psychological device. As it is, she probably attempts to meet his monologue with argument and debate. Talk, for him, is his only emotional outlet, and for her to try to stem it, or treat it as rational conversation, is as exhausting and futile as to bang her head against a stone wall all day long.

• • • •

For you, it is equally exhausting and futile to wear yourself out fretting because your mother's deportment isn't as finished as you would like it to be. Here again, I consider it unlikely she can ever be persuaded to change. It is proverbial wisdom that "you con't teach an old dog new tricks," and if your mother, at 65, disdains fastidious manners as finicky notions, and has no inner desire to conduct herself in such a way as to meet with your complete approval, there is little you can do about it.

• • • •

What little you can do is to be a gracious lady yourself, remembering that the person whose elegant manners reflect true inner refinement of being and feeling never, by word or glance or action, calls attention to another adult's lack of similar polish. Such an example of exquisite consideration on your part will probably do more than anything else to inspire her with a desire to improve. Love your mother for all that is good in her nature and learn, as best you can, to bear with her shortcomings as you see them.

• • • •

Neither your sisters nor your sister-in-law are legitimate objects of your passion for perfectionist reform. What their life patterns are to be, they will be, in spite of any critical objections to the contrary you may entertain. Some persons have the rare good fortune to be born into family groups whose members they can completely approve and, when grown, gladly accept as friends. But others, with an analytical turn of mind, discover, on growing up, that their blood relatives are as alien to them, spiritually, mentally and socially, as the veriest stranger. On making this discovery, the sensible thing to do is to accept them for what they are, bear with them courteously, and instead of trying to change or reform them, concern one's self with making one's self all that one thinks a highly civilized person should be.

• • • •

In this tangled skein of many problems, the only problem you are called upon to solve is the question of your currently frustrated existence. As a self-supporting individual you are, presumably, a self-governing individual. If you wish to marry and have a desirable opportunity to marry, and all that stands between you and marriage is quixotic martyrdom to your family, then the greatest contribution you can make to the scene, probably, is to clear out and lead your own life.

• • • •

If you have a married, childless, well-to-do sister who can better afford to assume her parents' support than you can, it is a grave mistake to let her pursue an idle and altogether selfish existence while you—simply because you are unmarried—carry the greater part of the load and develop a bad case of "nerves," so-called, in doing it. As I see it, most of your current dissatisfaction with the family is the outgrowth of nervous tension, which, in turn, results from carrying responsibilities inappropriate to your years and inimical to your emotional and social development. When parental support must be apportioned among children, it is only just that it should be apportioned according to the individual child's ability to pay, and not dumped willy-nilly on the shoulders of the meekly willing.

• • • •

If going to New York, even at a salary cut, will restore your perspective on life, so that you will find it possible to see your family through kindlier eyes; if it will give you greater opportunity for professional advancement than you have here, or can avail yourself of under the circumstances; if it will be the means of preserving your nervous health, which seems to be slowly breaking under the present strain; then I think you should give serious consideration to going.

• • • •

Your parents gave you life and it is your responsibility to make the most of that life. It is not necessary for you to repay that gift by making a painful sacrifice of all your talents and aspirations and opportunities. Of course, if it was a case of staying or leaving your parents in want; if they had no other children to turn to for support, you might have no alternative to staying. But it appears that the only difference your going would make would be the difference between cozy comfort and some self-deninal. And parents who give hostages to fortune in the form of large families on small incomes and limited prospects have deliberately invited the latter possibility. It might almost be said that if you carry your own load today, you are doing enough, particularly in view of the fact that you are barely out of adolescence, with your whole life before you. I think it would be a great mistake to lose sight of your own goal in life, in a confused effort to lift your family, by its very bootstraps, to a more elegant plane of living, and one for which its members have no taste, apparently. Live your life. Let them lead theirs—each according to his individual preference and ability. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Beauty Is Matter of Evolution, Careers of Movie Stars Reveal

Bette Davis and Myrna Loy Created Their Own Charm.

Hair, Figure and Voice Are Subjects of Concentration.

By Ida Jean Kain.

BETTE DAVIS
won her present rating as a glamour girl and beauty by working to that end. Her dramatic good looks are the result of several years of unremitting care.

IT HAS BEEN said that no woman is to blame for not being beautiful at 16, but that she has only herself to blame if she is not beautiful at 30. How close this comes to being the truth is perfectly illustrated by many of the famous movie stars. For examples there are Bette Davis, Norma Shearer, Myrna Loy, Irene Dunne and even Garbo.

That any of these actresses was in the ugly duckling class at 16 seems very unlikely, but within the last few years their beauty has grown amazingly.

Bette Davis Self-Made.

The evolution of Bette Davis as a glamour girl should be an inspiration to every woman who was not born beautiful. Miss Davis is a self-made beauty if there ever was one. Her most noticeable points are her hair, posture and poise, all the products of cultivation. This fine actress does not consider herself a beauty and we love her for it—but she is wrong!

Myrna Loy has capitalized on naturalness and is far lovelier today than when she played the role of an Oriental siren. Men regard Myrna Loy as the perfect wife and half the Nation's husbands are secretly in love with her.

Joan Crawford has done as much for herself as any girl in the movies or out of them. In this poised actress it would be hard to recognize any trace of the hey-hey girl she used to be. She has improved in every way. Her recognition as one of the screen's leading beauties is well deserved.

One of the most amazing things about these stars is that they are all in their thirties or thereabouts, and that they are the biggest box office draws in pictures. The years have taken no toll of their looks. On the contrary, there is not one of them who has not grown more lovely each year.

Hair and Carriage First.

The beauty factors on which movie stars concentrate are: Healthy condition of the hair and a flattering coiffure; the development of a musical speaking voice; perfection of figure and posture. No one is born with these charms. They must be acquired.

In Hollywood beauty is a serious business and a 24-hour day job. The results advertise themselves. Beauty is not that important to the average woman, but any woman profits immeasurably from a program in which her time for beauty is budgeted. You can spend one hour each day in the open air. You can take 15 minutes for the corrective exercise your figure needs. You can get in 100 strokes with the good old hairbrush and see that your skin is kept meticulously clean, so that your complexion will be fine-grained and lovely. You can do all these things and if you will do them you can grow better-looking each year.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, March 3.

"CELEBRITY CHASING" has become our town's leading outdoor sport in the last decade—a celebrity being anyone from the leading screen queen to a crackpot who dove off the Brooklyn bridge on a bet. Anyone who has ever attended a local first-night knows the howling mob of young raddleheads who jam the sidewalk and fight police and each other for an open-mouthed gape at Miss Joanie Crawford or Mr. Tyrone Power.

ALICE HUGHES.

Until now the sport has been entirely unorganized—every kid for itself. At present a more dignified phase of celeb-staring is being made shipshape by an organization called "Open House, Inc." the brain-baby of Mrs. Clara Hammond, for 15 years an occupational activity expert among collegians. Mrs. Hammond and colleagues have set themselves to arranging visits with various local lights for the thousands of college students who will rush here during spring vacation.

Over 3,000 have been polled on their personal picks. Head man is our colorful mayor, Mr. LaGuardia, with Thomas E. Dewey, Kirsten Flagstad, Toscanini, Helen Hayes, J. P. Morgan, Dorothy Thompson, Walter Winchell, Alexander Woollcott, Al Smith, Katharine Cornell, Noel Coward and way down near the foot, even old Aunt Alice. The idea is that these men and women are to hold time open for personal visits with the ardent young spirits who have checked them as objects of interest in our city.

Now this is very novel and interesting, of course, and would give a tremendous kick to the young idea. Unfortunately, the people pointed out as municipal curios are also about the busiest in town. Just where the mayor would squeeze time for such a dido I simply can't imagine. Nonetheless, I wish "Open House Ink" well. I'm all for organization—even in personality-pursuit!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Miss Sally Rand, the eminent bubble-bouncer and intellectual, has been displaying her charms hereabout for some weeks now, performing nightly at Prof. Billy Rose's Casa Manana. She does her work as an objet d'art, warmly clothed in a coat of white dusting-powder. Now, to the astonishment of the citizens, she has been cast in a new role by the professor. He has opened a new department of his rich chromium deadfal, called "The Palm Beach Room." It offers an inexpensive buffet supper, a swing band, and as "Mistress of Conversation" this same Miss Rand, dressed in the usual evening regalia of a lady of fashion! Miss Rand, I assume, is bandying small talk with the customers, and bouncing conversation with the same ease and grace as she does her balloons. Large crowds of curiosity-seekers are reported rushing to witness smart Sally with her clothes on!

How we love to pass out plaques here! The number of these honors awarded annually in New York would add up to the Empire State mooring mast. Just the other night the Gen. Mitchell plaque for achievement in aviation was tossed to Miss Jacqueline Cochran for flying at an all-time high for our sex. Miss Cochran is the wife of Financial Wizard Floyd Odlum, who probably wishes he could whiz through his dollar diplomacy with the speed and grace of his attractive spouse in the air.

Housekeeping note—our Waldorf-Astoria, inn offering shelter for man and beast, has just laid in some new rugs, and practically ruined traffic at the door, since the foyer rug alone is 48 feet square. It took 30 men to get it into the hotel. It's a chenille beauty, with a design from a mural by Louis Regal.

Girls Find an Easier Entrance At 'Stage Door' Than Do Boys

Linda Watkins, Young Actress, Says Looks and Personality Are an Asset at Beginning, but Grit Counts in Long Run.

By Nancy Archibald.

GIRLS find it easier than boys to break into the theater today, believes Linda Watkins, young actress who plays one of the leading roles in "I Am My Youth" at the National this week. However, that is not entirely an advantage in the long run, she believes, inasmuch as the girl who finds the going easy in the beginning because of looks or personality frequently cannot stand up to the hard struggle necessary for development later.

"Being ornamental is a great help today to the embryo actress," said Miss Watkins yesterday in her apartment at the Hay-Adams House. "There is a new school of producers today not interested in the drama for art's sake alone but eager to find plays on popular subjects.

"This is the age of discovery. Young people are given rather fat parts if they are willing to work for almost nothing. Directors will slave to whip them in shape. However, they must pull in their belts and slave, too, if they expect to get ahead.

"Things were a little different when I started in a few years ago. I went to the Theater Guild Dramatic School and then took any small part I could get until I was cast as an ingenue in a fantasy play, and little by little my work came to the attention of producers. Soon I was cast in the more heavily dramatic roles such as the one I have in this play. Then I married, planning to give up my career forever and devote myself to home life. Oh, when I think of the parts I refused then . . . I'd give anything to have them offered now."

Once attempted, Miss Watkins discovered, a career becomes essential in a woman's life. "My husband and my little boy absorb my interest," she said, "but there was so much time that hung empty and gave me the jitters. I missed the grueling hours of rehearsal. And so I returned to the stage, fearful at first I'd forgotten my technique. After a few shows, my nerves quieted down and I am completely content.

"Of course, a career and marriage do not always work out. It depends on the individual problem. My husband enjoys being at home rather than going about places every single evening so that he doesn't miss my companionship during the hours of performance as much as someone of a more restless temperament might. Later I expect my little boy will demand much more of my time. At present I have the luck of having a nurse who follows the regime I plan implicitly, and both the boy's father and grandmother keep a sharp eye on him when I must be away . . . but this is a long way from how to break into the theater.

Dinner Guests May Sometimes Be Waited For

By Margaret Wallace

CIRCUMSTANCES alter cases in the realm of etiquette as well as in other situations in life. This is especially true of the belated dinner guest. The rules of etiquette dictate that such a guest should not expect dinner to be kept waiting, and most hostesses observe hard and fast rules of not waiting more than 10 to 15 minutes for late guests.

As a rule, there is no deviation from the law of good manners that a dinner guest must be on time. An unusual circumstances in this regard was related in a letter to this department. It follows:

"Recently a Washington hostess and her dinner guests were gathered, waiting for the arrival of the guest of honor and his wife. The hostess was called to the telephone to learn that the belated honor guests were in an automobile accident and would be delayed for an indefinite period. They asked the hostess not to wait for them. They were marooned on a snowy night at the side of the road with their car disabled. So two of the men dinner guests started out on a "rescue" party.

"Calmly the hostess chatted with the guests, explained the accident, ordered the cocktails served and some extra crackers and the stuffed celery she had intended to serve with the dinner. One hour and 15 minutes late the dinner was served after the honor guests and their two men rescuers had been served their cocktails."

It is very evident that the circumstances of this particular delayed dinner party justified the hostess in waiting. The other guests would have been embarrassed at being served instead of waiting for the others, who were dealyed by circumstances they could not avoid.

The GENTLER SEX

The Ungracious Hostess

"Say, wouldn't you girls just rather leave your things down here in the hall than bother to go upstairs to primp?"

"This is Miss Gink. You better watch out how you behave around her. She's a schoolteacher . . . This is Mr. Spicer. He's just had some new twins. . . And this is Miss Doodle. Surely you all know Miss Doodle. She's a regular institution. . . ."

"Come here! You've been sitting on that chair too long."

Junior, darling, PLEASE don't make Miss Goode read that funny paper again. Why WON'T you go upstairs and go to bed?"

"Oh say, have you folks met Miss Dabbler? She writes. Won't you tell us about your writing, Miss Dabbler?

"Some of you women really ought to go over there and break up that bunch of men."

"That old lamp? . . . Yes, isn't it precious? You know it has a most fascinating history. Would you like to hear how I happened to find it?"

"Cigaret, Mrs. Mish? . . . Oh I forgot. You NEVER smoke."

"Toto! Don't paw the lady's stocking! . . . Yes, he's real friendly if he happens to like you, but you have to watch him. Toto!"

"Now everybody be still. Miss Ripple and Mrs. Pound are going to play a piano duet."

"Yes, we had a wonderful time in Bermuda. We took along our kodak. Say, maybe you'd like to see some snapshots . . ."

"Wait, I'll turn on some more lights so everybody can see better."

"Now! Now! Don't you people get started talking shop again. . ."

"Now, folks, we're going to have a little impromptu entertainment. We're going to call on every person here to get up and do some clever little stunt."

"You haven't touched your peach pickles? Or your spaghetti. Go ahead and eat your mince pie. It won't hurt you."

"Say, listen everybody: I've got a surprise for you! We're all going to have our pictures taken. No, no; don't anybody primp. My nephew here's got a new candid camera . . ."

"Oh, please don't go YET! No, please! Really if you go now it'll break up the whole party. Besides it's so early . . . only 2:30. No, please . . ."

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Cancer and Its Treatment.

Several letters have come in about the treatment of cancer of the breast, of which the following is a typical example: A woman writes to say that she had discovered a small lump in the breast, and wonders whether it could be due to the fact that she had some teeth extracted last week and that there was a gland enlargement from this.

The important thing here is to realize that you must not wait for advice by correspondence. It may be a simple inflammatory condition or it may be cancerous. But what it is should be determined immediately, and that can be done by any physician or surgeon.

Cancer is a local disease in its early stage, and cancer of the breast can usually be removed completely at this time, but it is serious when a few cells from the local growth wander out into the blood stream and begin to set up a growth of their own at distant places.

A great deal of importance has been made in the treatment of all of these cases by a combination of surgery and X-ray and radium. The use of X-ray and radium, either before or after operation, or both, has prevented the necessity for the radical operation with removal of large blocks of tissue which were perfected before radium and X-ray were known to be anti-cancerous.

When the disease is local and is treated by a combination of surgery and radiation, good results are obtained in a very large series of cases after a five-year period. In fact, the results in cancer of the breast, if intelligent treatment is instituted promptly after the discovery of a lump, are just as good as the results obtained in any chronic disease, and a great deal better than the results obtained in most chronic diseases.

It is no longer true that the diagnosis of cancer of the breast necessarily carries with it the implication of a fatal outcome, and the impotrant thing is to utilize the methods of treatment which we have available, and which have proved so successful, at the very earliest possible moment.

Many Parties Planned For Mr. and Mrs. Armour

New Ambassador to Chile and Wife to Be Feted at Continual Round of Entertainments Until Their Departure March 19.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

With March 19 circled on the calendar as the date of their sailing for Chile, Norman Armour, newly appointed United States Ambassador to that country, and Mrs. Armour will be feted at a continual round of parties up to the day of departure.

A career diplomat of nearly 25 years' service, Mr. Armour has been on duty in ten foreign capitals and the State Department here. He and his wife know scores of Washington residents who want to entertain them before they are off to the South American post. But their social calendar which could be filled with engagements morning, noon and night, has been kept clear of parties at intervals to admit a bit of visiting elsewhere.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Yesterday they went to New York for a dinner last night. They will be back at the Mayflower today and then be off again either tomorrow or the next day for a brief visit in historic Williamsburg. On Tuesday they will be the guests of honor at a dinner to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Selden Chapin, and on Thursday they will be feted again when Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins entertains at dinner for them.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapin knew the Armours in Haiti, where Mr. Armour was Minister before going to Canada. He succeeded the late Warren Delano Robbins in Ottawa, where he was at the time of appointment to the Chile post.

Mrs. Armour Was Russian Princess

Mrs. Armour, who has almost as many friends in Washington as her husband, was Princess Myra Koudacheff, of Petrograd. Mr. Armour was secretary of the American Embassy there from 1916 through 1918. Shortly after his transfer to the embassy in Brussels, his marriage took place on February 2, 1919.

On Ambassador Armour's recent schedule of parties was the dinner given Wednesday by a group of State Department and service officials, who have served in Haiti and have been interested in organizing an "order" similar to fraternities formed by men stationed in other islands.

Among the guests were Brig. Gen. James Buttrick, Col. E. M. Spencer, Col. O. B. Matthews, Lieut. Col. F. A. Hart, Lieut. Col. A. N. Noble, Lieut. Col. A. W. Jacobsen, Lieut. Col. L. D. Hermle, Capt. M. A. Stuart, Capt. A. D. Wornham, Capt. R. D. Leach, Selden Chapin and G. A. Drew. Brig. C. B. Vogel was toastmaster.

Accompanying Mr. and Mrs. Armour to Chile will be Miss Marian Cruikshank, of Ottawa, who is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Kauffmann. When she first arrived in Washington she visited Miss Nancy Leiter. Miss Cruikshank is Mrs. Armour's secretary.

THE MOST DILIGENT speechmaker in the diplomatic corps is Greek Minister Demetrios Sicilianos. When not talking on his favorite avocation, archeology, he is addressing Greek-American societies from here to San Francisco. He can declaim in English, French and Italian almost as well as in Greek . . . Besides his better known qualifications, Donald Richberg is a delight to Capital hostesses because of a huge fund of amusing songs which he sings with professional manner. At the University of Chicago he was an enthusiastic member of the dramatic society and even now goes back sometimes to help "the boys" with their shows.

Clarkson, brother-in-law and sister of Mrs. George Garrett.

Just when it seems as though one couldn't go anywhere these days without having to learn a game, Elsa has introduced a form of bridge played with five suits. A group of New Yorkers with time on their hands has already formed classes to master the new sport.

Almanach Settles Windsor Address; It Is 'Traveling'

The Almanach de Gotha, recently off the presses, has solved the changing addresses of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, by listing all of them under one head —"Traveling."

Furthermore, the Duke of Windsor, who in past years only rated one entry in the genealogical social registry of royalty and the Continent's leading titled families, is now mentioned twice. The first time he appears with his family, just below his brother, King George VI; the second time the Duke and his wife are listed together under the name of Windsor. All the Duke's military titles are retained, which make him still an admiral of the British fleet, field marshal of the aviation force and admiral of the merchant marine.

The Duchess is listed as "Bessie Warfield, divorced Spencer, then divorced Simpson; born Warfield; born at Monterey, Va., U. S. A., June 19, 1896."

D. C. Hostesses Lack Chance To Fete Busy Visiting Sultan

Endless Round of Luncheons and Dinners Engulf Muscat Potentate—at White House, Carlton and Fort Myer.

Persons around town who have been wondering whether upon introduction to a Sultan one is expected to say "Selah" and bend from the waist; and if a Sultan, upon entering an elevator, removes his turban, are having all their questions answered with the advent of the potentate of Muscat and Oman. Ever since Sey Yid Said Teimur Bin Faisal arrived at Union Station yesterday and was escorted up Pennsylvania avenue by a detachment of cavalry, he has been social-whirling like a dervish.

While passing motorists stared goggle-eyed, the Sultan rode straight through traffic lights to the White House, where he had luncheon with President Roosevelt and a few other well-chosen guests.

McReynolds, Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State; George T. Summerlin, chief of protocol; Marvin H. McIntyre and Capt. W. K. Kilpatrick. Others were Col. John A. Crane, Wallace Murray, Capt. Methodists Pay $24,000 On Building

$39,000 Left on Debt for Home Erected Here 11 Years Ago.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The Methodist Home of the District of Columbia will enter its fiftieth year next January with the building clear of debt, if the goal announced yesterday at the annual meeting of the board of managers is attained. Mrs. Harry Hoskinson, who has been chairman of the board the last nine years, was re-elected, as were other officers serving with her.

Mrs. Harry Underwood, chairman of the committee for the golden anniversary celebration, reported that, since last May, $24,000 of the $63,000 debt on the building, erected 11 years ago, had been paid off. January 21 of next year a dinner is to be held at which the committee hopes to announce the balance of the indebtedness cleared.

During the last year, $12,812 has been received from legacies and $30,000 through gifts of cash. Of that amount, $24,00 was applied to the debt and the balance used for operating expenses of the institution. There have been 51 residents cared for in the home during the year.

It is supported by 76 churches of the Methodist denomination in the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia, whose contributions are handled by the board of managers. The annual donation day in the fall, when each of the churches sends gifts of canned goods, staple groceries and other supplies, assists materially in the maintenance during the winter months.

Program Provided For Home Family

There are various groups, such as the Reading Circle, which provide recreation and programs for the entertainment of the home family. Among the Washington artists who have given freely of their talents has been Carolyn Nordica-Bost, mezzo soprano, who sang at the program yesterday morning.

Representative John McSweeney, of Ohio, who for four years was director of public welfare in his State, addressed the annual meeting following the business session.

One of the characteristics which distinguishes man from the lower animals is his sense of responsibility for the well being of the aged, he pointed out.

Discussing the whole field of welfare with which he had come in contact during his four years' work as director in Ohio, Representative McSweeney urged the women to extend their humanitarian interest to include the problem of the delinquent child. He urged support for able Juvenile Court and probation officers without respect to their political affiliations, and also made a plea for understanding of the "mentally sick" and an effort to do more for those so afflicted.

The meeting was held in the drawing room of the home and crowds overflowed into the adjoining corridors. Among those attending were Mr. Hoskinson, who, as chairman of the board of trustees, has worked for years with his wife for the advancement of the institution, and Mrs. F. S. Cawson, honorary president, and one of three charter members of the board who remain. The other two, Mrs. G. Z. Colison and Mrs. Samuel Walker, are no longer active in work for the home.

Waite, second vice president; Mrs. Howell Bartle, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. L. Buell, assistant corresponding secretary; Miss Bertha Gray, recording secretary; Mrs. C. Stanley Titus, jr., assistant recording secretary; Mrs. Dudley F. Holtman, treasurer, and Mrs. Edward M. Hall, assistant treasurer.

Mrs. Lucretia Knoke is superintendent and Miss Caroline W. Swift, nurse and assistant superintendent.

Songfest Plans Are Announced

The Panhellenic Council of American University has announced its second annual songfest, to be sponsored March 8 at the university. The purpose of the event is to encourage song writing among students, to provide new songs for the school and to encourage friendly competition among the fraternities in singing their favorite tunes.

A prize of a $5 book bond will be awarded to the fraternity or sorority having the best group-singing. No solos or duets are to be included in the selections presented and alumni are excluded from participation. An additional $5 prize is offered the student submitting the best original banquet song, and this is open to non-fraternity students.

James McLain, musical director, will choose the judges, and Lew Frank, president of the Student Council, will be master of ceremonies. Preceding the contest, community singing will be led by Bill Thompson.

Last year, when the initial contest was held, individual prizes were awarded Polly Lehman and Herbert Fuchs, and first and second places in the fraternity singing were won by Delta Gamma Sorority and Phi Sigma Kappa Fraternity.

The various groups on the campus have been rehearsing regularly since the contest was first announced, and some time at practically every meeting is devoted to "tuning up."

3 Prize Dramas Slated Tonight

The Laboratory Little Theater of the District Branch of the National League of American Pen Women, of which Rose Robison Cohen is chairman, tonight is presenting its three prize-winning plays in their premiere at the Grafton Hotel. They will be repeated tomorrow night.

Mrs. Yvonne Kushner, of the Washington Civic Theater, is guest director of the "Bridge of Rama," which was written by Mrs. Larz Anderson. The cast includes Miss Gail Richardson, Mrs. Doris Cooper, Miss Phronsie Marsh, Miss Tracy Strohecker, Miss Jane Duenner, Miss Barbara Friedman, Miss Louise Young, Miss Ida Larkin, Miss Mary Mitchell and Miss Grace McMillan. Miss Friedman and Miss Young are members of the Civic Theater Ballet; Miss Larkin, Miss Mitchell and Miss McMillan are students of the Rollins Dance Studio. The Oriental dance routines are being handled by Mrs. Elizabeth Giles, of the Washington Civic Theater Ballet.

The "Bridge of Rama," based on the mythology and religion of India, will have authentic and colorful settings and costumes. The players have taken full advantage of the first-hand knowledge of India possessed by Mrs. Joan Southard, stage manager of the Laboratory Little Theater. The costumes, designed and executed by Mrs. Kitty Liebschutz, are patterned after several priceless pieces of orientalia loaned for the occasion by Mrs. Anderson.

Mrs. Lillian Buller is guest director of "This Is Drama," which was written by Dr. Emily Maxwell Maddox. In the cast are Mrs. Kitty Pfeffer, Miss Adele Gusack, Miss Ruth Goodman, Fulton Reichlin and George Speck. This play is a lively domestic comedy, replete with smart and sophisticated badinage.

Miss Elizabeth Sypher, of the Washington Arts Club, is guest director of "Duet in Manhattan," by Mrs. Florence Kahn. There is a cast of two—Ben Smart and Larry Lawrence, in the roles of brothers who face age-old problems.

D. A. R. Leaders Unveil Doorway In Alexandria

Mrs. Becker Attends Forty-Second Annual Virginia Conference.

Mrs. William A. Becker, president general of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution; Mrs. Arthur Rowbotham, Virginia, state regent; Mrs. William Pouch, national president of the Children of the American Revolution, and many other national and State officers who are in Alexandria for the forty-second annual State conference of the Virginia Daughters, yesterday afternoon gathered in historic Gadsby's Tavern to witness the unveiling of the restored Royal street doorway of the building. The doorway was dedicated in memory of Mrs. Eleanor Selden Washington Howard.

Mrs. Robert Miller Reese presided and the invocation was by the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, a nephew of Mrs. Howard's and a brother of the presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Bishop of Virginia. Mrs. Reese explained that the doorway was restored by the Mount Vernon Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Alexandria, of which Mrs. Howard and her four sisters, the last of the Washington family to live at Mount Vernon, were charter members and present at the organizing meeting at Mount Vernon on May 15, 1893. Mrs. Howard was to have unveiled it, but there was a delay in the work and she had become ill and died on November 7, 1937. It was then decided to wait until this State gathering and dedicate the doorway to this distinguished member of the local chapter.

Mrs. Sinclair Makes Address

Mrs. C. A. Swann Sinclair, a relative of Mrs. Howard's, and candidate for State regent, made the dedicatory address, and gave as a eulogy, the resolution adopted by Mount Vernon at the time of Mrs. Howard's death. She stated that Mrs. Howard was the last girl child of the Washington family-born at Mount Vernon, on March 15, 1856, and her early childhood was spent at this historic home. She had served as a vice president general of the National Society, D. A. R., and, since 1927, had been honorary vice president general for life and also a vice president of the National Society, Children of the American Revolution.

The veil was drawn by John Augustine Washington, a great-nephew of Mrs. Howard and a namesake of his great-grandfather, the last private owner of Mount Vernon.

F. Clinton Knight, chairman of the Gadsby's Tavern Committee and a past department commander of the Virginia American Legion, accepted the doorway on behalf of Alexandria Post, No. 24, and explained the ownership of this building by the post.

Legion Post Entertains at Tea

Alexandria Post, No. 24, American Legion, Commander Herbert A. Cady, and the auxiliary, Mrs. Franklin DeDier, president, entertained the visitors at a tea at the close of the ceremonies and were assisted by Mrs. Ward Brown and Mrs. Norman D. Monfalcone, of the Alexandria Association.

Between their morning and night business sessions, they visited Christ Church, Gadsby's Tavern and the Masonic lodge, all of which are linked intimately with George Washington's activities there.

At Christ Church, where Washington was a vestryman, delegates to the forty-second annual conference placed white flowers in a cross honoring Virginia D. A. R.'s who died in the past year.

At the Masonic lodge rooms in the city hall they saw historic relics associated with Washington, who was first worshipful master of the Alexandria lodge.

Women Lawyers in U. S. Work Are Discussed at Bar Dinner

Louise Foster, Department of Justice Aide, and Florence Curoe, Attorney in Veterans' Administration, Tell of Jobs in Those Fields.

The status of women lawyers in Federal service was discussed last night at the third of a series of informal dinners given by the Women's Bar Association at the Continental Hotel. Judge Annabel Matthews, president of the association, presided and Mrs. Mary Connor Myers, chief attorney in the solicitor's office of the Department of Agriculture, was in charge of the program and participated in it.

Sixty-nine of the 215 members of the association are in Federal service and their work is not familiar to the group in private practice in the District. Miss Louise Foster, of the tax division of the Department of Justice, discussed the function of women lawyers in her division and those in the tax sections of other government departments. Miss Florence Curoe, attorney in the Veterans Administration, spoke on the place of women lawyers in this bureau. Miss Katherine Shilling, assistant chief in the examining section of the Civil Service, discussed civil service positions for lawyers in Federal service.

The next meeting of the association will be the annual banquet on Saturday, March 26, when Judge Florence Allen will be guest of honor and speaker.

Among the members present last night were Judge Ellen K. Raedy, Miss Beatrice Clephane, director of the Legal Aid Bureau, former president of the Women's Bar Association and chairman of the program committee for the series of dinners, and Dean Grace Hays Riley, of the Washington College of Law.

About 75 attended the dinner which was held at 6:30. Following the discussion of their various fields of work by the four speakers, there was an open forum and the women attorneys were ready with their questions.

Shad True Harbinger Of Spring

Although Bony, Fish Is One of Favorites of Epicures.

A Tart Lemon Sherbet Provides a Tasty Accompaniment.

By Jean Green.

AMONG THE true harbingers of spring is fresh shad. It is one of Washington's favorite fish and is now coming in from North Carolina. Although it is quite bony, it is a favorite of the epicure. It has a delicate and distinctive flavor, and the roe is highly prized.

The task of boning shad is best left to the market man. He is skilled in this and is able to remove the largest bones and still keep the contour of the fish intact. It is best to forget the obscurely placed bones.

JEAN GREEN.

If you like roe, then be sure you get roe shad when you purchase. This is about twice as large and much plumper than the buck shad. Both are on the market at present.

The shad may be baked, broiled or planked. The roe may be baked separately or with the fish or it may be cooked for breakfast with eggs.

Creamed Roe Good.

I like to serve the shad with creamed roe. A three-pound shad cleaned, boned and split down the center. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, brush with melted butter and place on a buttered plank. Bake for 25 minutes in a hot oven.

Prepare the roe by parboiling it and mashing it until free from lumps. Melt 2 tablespoons of butter, add chopped green onion tops and cook for three minutes. Add 2 tablespoons of flour and mix well. Add a cup of top milk or thin cream and cook gently. Add an egg yolk two minutes before taking from the stove. Season well with salt, pepper and lemon juice.

Remove the shad from the oven, spread with the roe mixture, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and return to the oven to brown.

Baked shad is prepared in the same fashion. The shad may be baked either with or without the roe sauce. If served without the roe garnish generously with lemon wedges, parsley and spring radishes.

Other Fish Arriving.

Other fresh fish are coming into local markets to add variety to the Lenten menus. Bass, porgy and flounder are in this week from Norfolk. The bass and flounder are excellent for baking. Both are classed as lean fish and should be larded before baking. The larding means inserting strips of fat (either salt pork or bacon) into gashes at intervals along the sides of the fish before baking. The shad does not need this additional fat in preparation.

To serve bass have the butcher clean the fish, but keep the head and tail intact. Wipe it well with a damp cloth, have the eyes removed and stuff with a favorite stuffing. Bake at 425 degrees and allow 20 minutes to the pound.

Serve the fish with a lemon butter sauce made by blending 2 teaspoons of lemon juice with 4 tablespoons of butter. A tablespoon of minced parsley can be added for color if desired. The tart flavor of the sauce highlights the delicate flavor of the fish.

Sherbet Suggested.

The proper accompaniment to fish is always important. For baked fish, a tart lemon sherbet or a tasty frozen ice made from unsweetened canned greengage plums is an innovation.

A good sauce is needed with most types of fish. These rules for choosing the right sauce were given to me by a Boston chef whose taste in seafood was excellent. He recommended a drawn butter sauce for steamed fish, a maitre d'hotel butter for broiled fish, tartar sauce with French fried fish, black butter with pan fried or sauteed fish, and a tomato and egg sauce with boiled fish.

Italian Olives.

To prepare olives Italian style, marinate in a small amount of garlic tinged olive oil for three or four hours or over night. First rub the bowl with a cut clove of garlic, add the oil and allow the garlic to remain in the oil for a short time before adding the olives. Cover the bowl and chill.

Contrast for the Lenten Dinner

A perfect Lenten dinner includes whole baked fish, served with whipped potatoes, julienne carrots, and fresh peas. The flavor contrast is provided by frozen dessert made of canned green gage plums and fluffy marshmallows.

Milk-Made Dessert Proves Favorite

Milk-made puddings rank high in the list of dessert "favorites," for even though they're nourishing they have a delicacy that makes them a fitting end for any meal. Caramel pecan pudding is particularly appealing and is most attractive molded in a large ring and garnished with toasted pecan halves. (To make it even more partyish, serve in individual molds with a sprinkling of chopped nuts on top.)

The intriguing caramel flavor of this pudding is produced by caramelizing part of the sugar. Contrary to popular belief, there's no trick to caramelizing sugar.

Caramel Pecan Pudding.

½ cup sugar caramelized
2 cups boiling water
5 tablespoons cornstarch
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt
2 cups irradiated evaporated milk
½ cup pecans, chopped
½ teaspoon vanilla

Caramelize ½ cup sugar by heating slowly in a skillet or shallow saucepan until completely melted. Stir as little as possible. Add water slowly and boil until no lumps remain. Mix cornstarch, ½ cup sugar and salt. Add milk a little at a time stirring to blend well. Stir in the caramel syrup. Cook over boiling water until thickened, stirring frequently. Cover and cook 15 minutes longer. Remove from heat, add vanilla and nuts and pour into molds that have been rinsed with cold water. Yield: 8 to 10 servings.

Cheese Biscuits Are Popular, Easily Prepared Quickbread

Other Varieties Can Be Flavored With Orange, Maple, Cinnamon and Even Deviled Ham; Recipe Given.

QUICKBREADS are among the important items in every woman's cookbook. They can be served for breakfast, lunch and dinner and they disappear like magic whenever they are served. There are many ways these simple recipes for hot breads can be varied. Muffins can be baked with a sprinkle of powdered sugar and nuts on top; floured raisins or chopped dates can be added to the batter. Chopped fresh apples or drained canned blueberries can be used. Crumbled bacon and diced ham make these breads nourishing.

Biscuits have even more chances for variation. They can be flavored with orange, maple, cinnamon, or even deviled ham. One unusual variation of the baking powder biscuit is called a cheese pinwheel. The dough is rolled with grated cheese, then sliced. In the oven the cheese melts and puffs up over the top.

Cheese Biscuits.

2 cups of flour
½ teaspoon of salt
1 tablespoon of baking powder
¼ cup of butter
2-3 cup of milk
1 cup of grated sharp cheese

Sift the flour, salt and baking powder together into a mixing bowl. Cut in the butter. Add milk and stir quickly until the dough thickens. Turn out on a floured board and knead for 30 seconds and roll out thin. Spread with grated cheese and roll up tightly like a cinnamon roll. Cut into ¾-inch slices. Transfer to a baking sheet and bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees) for 20 minutes or until delicately browned. This makes 18 biscuits.

Smart housewives will also want to include these biscuits on the menu on nights when the main dish is a roast or casserole dish. This will save on electricity or gas, as the biscuits can be cooked in the oven already heated.

Market Tips

A canape spread that does not soften the cracker base, even on standing, is the newest trick demonstrated at a local food shop. The spread is an egg yolk paste packaged in a tube. A nozzle with a wide outlet spreads the paste in a wide band over the canape crackers to give moisture proofing to it. Any type of flavorful appetizer can then be used as a garnish, but this same firm has anchovy paste, gorgonzola cheese in brandy, English stilton in port, and cheddar cheese in port packaged with special nozzles for decorating purposes. Also in jars come stars, hearts and diamonds cut from red pimento, green pimento and from crisp green cucumber rings. The result is a tray of canapes, colorfully decorated in 10 minutes.

• • • •

For the week end, canapes go partying in a petite market basket covered with blue plaid paper. The contents are canape crackers, egg paste, anchovy paste, and a jar of red pimiento decorators.

• • • •

Mustard now comes in flavors. One shop has four different types packaged for gift purposes. The flavors are okra, tarragon, green herb and tomato. Each has a specific purpose on the spice shelf. To the epicure, they mean special treats in salad dressings and sauces for the cold meat platter.

• • • •

A huge crop of Florida valencias and California navel oranges makes them unusually low priced at this season of the year. Try them sectioned with a sweetening of after dinner mints. The mint candles dissolve quickly in the orange juice and give a cool flavor to the fruit.

Calavo Popular Hors d'Oeuvres on American Menu

The custom of serving hors d'oeuvres is one of foreign extraction adopted by Americans and now includes a cosmopolitan mixture of the desirable relishes of all countries.

One that has become thoroughly Americanized is the much relished Calavo in any of the various forms to which it adapts itself, balls, cubes, rings, wedges or crescent slices. Both in color and the nut-rich flavor which contrasts so delightfully with the tart relishes of customary services, the Calavo is well suited to supply simple and delectable bulk for hors d'oeuvre service.

Sieved Calavo makes an attractive base for a canape spread. It should be seasoned with various condiments such as horseradish, mustard, Worcestershire or Tabasco sauces. Obtain variety by substituting minced pimento, green pepper, celery, or olives for the canned green chili pepper.

I insist on McCormick's Cinnamon because it makes better cinnamon toast

None in Post Contest Agree on Recipes For Salad Bowl; Whim Seems Rule

Many Favor Using the Tender Flowerlets of Cauliflower.

Mildred Koplin Winner With Dish Calling for Anchovies.

A multitude of vegetables and fruits were chopped and blended before recipes in the past week's salad bowl contest were chosen. Winning recipes printed on this page were selected from approximately 200 entries.

THE SALAD BOWL, a herbaceous treat that brings health and interest to early spring menus, can be varied in dozens of ways. The recipes in the last contest proved clearly that the combinations are based on personal whim. No two recipes were identical. Many recipes used the tender flowerlets of cauliflower either in the salad or as a special garnish. Miss Anne Belle Estes, of Sperryville, Va., used a cluster of cauliflower inside a pepper ring as a garnish on her spring salad. Mrs. J. F. Manley, 4302 Tenth street northwest, uses shredded uncooked spinach as a salad base. Mrs. Alvin Pierson, Hamilton, Va., adds chili sauce to the mayonnaise used on a mixed cabbage salad. Mrs. Horace Winter, The Kenesaw, recommends a pot of growing chives on the window sill. A blade or two of chive lends an indefinable finishing touch to the salad bowl, she has found.

The recipe winning first prize is colorful and unusual. Shreds of anchovy fillets give a continental flavor to it. It was submitted by Mildred Koplin, 2315 Fifteenth street northwest.

SALAD BOWL DISH

1 head of chopped lettuce
1 small can of anchovies
1 small can of diced pimientos
1 diced green pepper
1 cup of diced celery
2 cups of cubed tomatoes
1 grated carrot
1 grated onion

Mix thoroughly equal parts of lemon juice and salad oil. Add salt, pepper, and paprika to taste. Blend with salad ingredients and serve on huge leaves of lettuce.

A man's idea of salad is fresh green salad served with Roquefort cheese. Frank Kos, Battery B, 16th F. A., Fort Myer, Va., contributes a masculine viewpoint to the salad bowl and wins second prize with this recipe.

FRESH GREEN SALAD

1 bunch of endive (curly)
1 bunch of watercress
1 head of lettuce
1 bunch of green onions
1-3 pound of Roquefort cheese
French dressing

Chop all greens uniformly. Add the cheese and salt. Just before serving add the dressing and mix carefully. Serve in the salad bowl with sliced tomatoes around the edge. Garnish with onion rings and sprinkle with paprika.

Fresh fruit and greens glistening with a special oil dressing make this Golden Gate salad appetizer a treat to the eye and palate. The recipe is a favorite with Miss Mary Cole, 112 E. Church street, Frederick City, Md., and wins third prize.

GOLDEN GATE SALAD APPETIZER

2 grapefruit, sectioned and free from membrane
2 large oranges, sectioned and free from membrane
1 head of lettuce
½ bunch of watercress
1 cup of white grapes, seeded and halved
Paprika

DRESSING

¾ cup of olive oil
¼ cup of lemon juice
1 teaspoon of sugar
¾ teaspoon of salt
1 soft ripe alligator pear

Combine the olive oil, lemon juice, salt, and sugar. Shake thoroughly or beat with egg beater until smooth and blended. Scoop soft flesh from the alligator pear, mash with a fork and mix with the French dressing.

Cut the grapefruit and orange sections in pieces. Cut the lettuce, and watercress in pieces. Place lettuce and cress in the salad bowl, add fruit, and begin to add dressing, tossing lightly. Add only enough dressing so that all ingredients glisten and are marinated. Sprinkle with paprika.

Two cents a serving is the approximate cost of Poor Man's Salad. A real bargain in health values! The dressing is a tart boiled dressing that needs top of the stove cooking. The recipe comes from Mrs. Essie Oxendine, 217 Peabody street northwest, and wins fourth prize.

POOR MAN'S SALAD

2 cups of shredded green cabbage.
1 cup of shredded red cabbage
1 cup of shredded carrots
2 tablespoons of minced chives

DRESSING

3 tablespoons of flour
1 tablespoon of sugar
½ teaspoon of salt
½ teaspoon of dry mustard
1 cup of milk
2 tablespoons of vinegar
2 tablespoons of salad oil

Mix the flour, sugar, salt and mustard. Blend with milk and cook over hot water until thick. Beat in the salad oil, then the vinegar. Cool and dilute with cream or top milk to proper consistency.

Prepare and mix the vegetables. Add the dressing. Blend with a fork and serve in a lettuce lined bowl. This will serve six generously.

Grandmother's Favorite Salad brings minerals and vitamins to those who are not able to chew celery, radishes and raw carrots. The recipe was sent in by Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist, 4939 Thirtieth place northwest, and wins the fifth prize in the contest.

GRANDMOTHER'S FAVORITE SALAD.

Rub the salad bowl with onion. Line it with lettuce, shredded fine. Chop together 2 cold boiled potatoes, 6 small cooked carrots, 2 raw tomatoes. Add ½ cup of cooked fresh peas, juice of ½ lemon, 1 tablespoon of mayonnaise, some Roquefort cheese and mix well. Place in the bowl on lettuce, slice a hard boiled egg over the top and garnish with chopped parsley. The salad is appetizing as well as nutritious and is excellent for some one who has just had teeth pulled or those unable to eat raw vegetables satisfactorily.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

IT SEEMS to us that the political bigwigs might take a page from almost any homemaker's book if they really want to know something about planned economy. They'd probably not get the whole answer to the question, but any bright lady could tell them a thing or two about stretching dollars and doughnuts so that the tomorrows may reap a goodly harvest. They might talk, as we did, to a very forthright friend who is planning her home for present comfort and future loveliness.

"Some decorators make me tired," said Florence, "I'd like to know how they figure Jim's $40 a week would finance their suggestions."

We though her indictment quite just, especially since we were then sitting in quite a charming living room which Florence herself had achieved on her limited budget but without decorative didoes. She admitted that it had taken several years of the very best sort of planned economy to acheve it, but the wait was worth it. She started out with an idea, you see, and had the courage and good sense not to be satisfied with mediocre results.

"We had to buy our furniture on a budget plan; but we went to one of the best department stores and bought wisely," she explained. "A sofa with good, clean, unchanging lines, two upholstered but not suffy chairs and a rug—a room-sized carpet in warm brown—were out first purchases. The painting we did ourselves—walls a light, pale yellow, the woodwokr a rich ivory. Then for a while we rested, filling in the room with books we had, wedding present lamps and the like.

"But I began watching sales, still at the very best tsores. I always had the completed picture in mind so I was never led off the path by 'bargains' in material that I really couldn't use to best advantage. For the draperies and slip covers for the two chairs I was lucky to find a really divine linen with with a deep dusty blue background and floral figures in yellow, beige and just a touch of wine. I forgot to say that long before I ever spent my money onthe material, I had bought really good fixtures for hanging draperies. I'd sicvored that so many women spend all their money on draperies and then spoil the whole effect with second-rate fixtures.

"Later I was able to find just the right striped linen for the sofa—chocolate brown and pale blue, very dramatic! My husband built the bookcases and we painted them the same yellow as the walls, with pale blue insides. We also painted the mantel and brick facing of the fireplace pale blue.

"Tables have come and we've added lamps and potted plants and bibelots. That handsome folding screen you see over there was the latest addition—my Christmas present to us from us!"

There, Mr. Economist, a lesson from a very smart lady!

Face Rejuvenation.

For a quick rejuvenation of a tired face, when time is pressing, Florence Rice, movie actress, uses milk of magnesia.

First, wash the face thoroughly with soap and warm water; shake the bottle of magnesia well and apply the creamy mixture to the face with the fingertips; allow to dry thoroughly, and remove with a warm, wet cloth. The face is left fresh and smooth, ready for make-up.

Rouge goes back to the ears. Jacqueline Laurent, petite French movie star, advocates, when the hair is piled high and drawn back showing the ears, the use of a little cream rouge, rubbed smoothly and evenly into the ear lobes.

Casserole Recipe Suitable for Buffet

Two hot dishes for buffet service is the usual rule. Here's a savory hot dish that is a perfect disguise for the quickly available canned vegetable and sure to cause comment for its perfection of flavoring. This type of ripe olive and cheese seasoned casserole is also especially appropriate to buffet use.

String Beans En Casserole.

¼ cup salad oil
¼ cup finely cut onion
1 green sweet pepper
1 small button garlic
2 cups tomato sauce
1-3 cup grated Italian type cheese
Salt
1½ cups whole ripe olives
1 quart cooked or canned string beans

Heat oil; add onion, finely cut green pepper and minced garlic and cook until vegetables are wilted. Add tomato sauce, cheese, salt to taste, olives and beans. Pour into casserole and bake in a hot oven (400 degrees F.) about 15 minutes. Serve hot. Serves 6 to 8.

FOOD FORUM

THE HOME FORUM is being instituted on the food page to register the opinion of the Washington housewife on selected culinary problems.

"What use are you making of canned fruit?" is the question selected for this week's discussion.

Here are four answers:

MRS. FRED BALLARD, 1306 A street southeast: "Canned fruit is a lifesaver in menu planning. This month I am tired of vegetables, yet it is too early for many spring fruits, so I use the canned fruits in salads and desserts.

"One special dish that I find popular is to cut a small package of marshmallows in half, drain the juice from a medium can of crushed pineapple and add the pineapple to the marshmallows. I pour over this a half pint of coffee cream, add thin strips of yellow orange rind (no white) and let it stand overnight. During the day I stir it once or twice. The pineapple and cream melt the marshmallows into a fluffy smooth dessert. I sometimes add the contents of a 10-cent can of maraschino cherries to give additional color. The dessert is a young housekeeper's delight, as it can be made the night before serving and never fails."

• • • •

MRS. A. D. WARD, 1833 New Hampshire avenue northwest: "My cooking time is limited, so I depend on canned fruits to provide special desserts and quickly prepared garnishes for meat. My shortcake is made from sliced sponge cake. I use drained sliced peaches between the layers and on top and garnish with a fluff of whipped cream. When I have Virginia ham on hand, I place slices of it in a casserole and halves of peaches and place under the broiler until the peaches have browned and the ham heated through."

• • • •

MRS. DON YOUNG, 2305 Joyce street, Aurora Hills, Va.: "I usually chill canned fruit and serve it as it comes from the can, but I do make one dessert from canned peaches that is popular. It is an old fashioned upside down cake made with a sweet biscuit dough. I use sliced peaches for it and pour the peaches and syrup in the bottom of the baking dish, then top with the batter. I sprinkle granulated sugar lightly over the batter and bake quickly until browned.

• • • •

MRS. ROBERT MENAUGH, 322 Second street northeast: "Canned fruits give me inspiration for salads. I use canned peaches and pears most frequently and usually serve them with a stuffing of cheese. I also serve canned grapefruit jellied in lime gelatin.

Fruit Juice Used In Basting Meat

A new flavor can be given roasts or baked vegetables by basting them with certain types of fruit juices. Baked carrots basted with apricot juice is a very delicious dish. Mashed sweet potatoes seasoned with orange juice and grated peel is superior to the dish seasoned with plain butter, salt and pepper. The juice from plums can be used in basting baked squash during cookery. Thick apple rings, onions, or parsnips are also adaptable to this method of cooking. The time for cooking will depend on the size and variety of the vegetable used.

In using the fruit juices for basting meats, large roasts or the more tough cuts of meat need only be basted during the last half of the baking process. Shoulder or breast of veal or lamb are delicious basted with the fruit juice. If the roast is small, cover the meat, cook until browned, then add the fruit juice and lower temperature during the remainder of cooking to prevent scorching. Roasts of pork, ham and chicken can also be baked in this manner.

Quick Frosting.

Springle chopped dates, raisins, chocolate shot or grated sweet chocolate, nuts, coconut or candied fruit over the top of cake batter just before putting it into the oven.

Time Is Saved By Baking Cake With Frosting On

Cake that is baked with the frosting saves time. Furthermore, a recipe that can be made in the form of a mix and stored in the refrigerator until needed is convenient.

To make the mix, cream 2/3 cup of butter and add 2 cups of sugar slowly. Then mix and sift together 4 cups of cake flour, 4 teaspoons of baking powder and ½ teaspoon of salt. Add these dry ingredients to the creamed mixture and blend thoroughly. Keep in a covered container in the refrigerator.

On the night when you come home from shopping late, and wish to prepare a quick hot dessert, measure out one-half of the mix, and break with a fork. Combine 1 egg (well beaten), 1 cup of milk and 1 teaspoon of vanilla extract. Add to the portion of the mix and blend thoroughly. Place in a well greased baking pan (9 inches by 9 inches) and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 30 minutes.

During this time, combine 1 cup of brown sugar, 1/3 cup of butter, 1¾ cups of cocoanut and 4 tablespoons of milk. Cook together for 10 minutes. After the cake has baked for 30 minutes, spread this mixture over it and return to the oven. Bake 10 minutes longer. Serve hot.

Perry Is Easily Riled in Tennis Events.

By Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla.

To Whom It May Concern: Ellsworth Vines, whose racket is tennis, says that if Fred Perry had Don Budge's temperament Perry would beat him every night . . . but the Briton permits himself to be upset by close decisions and hard-luck shots . . . Vines' match with Perry here last night had been a sell-out for a week . . . the pair expect to net $25,000 each from their winter tour . . . There can be no national professional tennis tournament because it would be a foregone conclusion that Perry and Vines would sweep through any tournament as they please and meet in the final round for the title . . . The promoters of the Perry-Vines tour prefer to let the pro championship remain a mooted affair.

POVICH.

The Washington ball club is permitted the choice of two graduates of Joe Stripp's baseball school annually in return for allowing Stripp to use the Orlando park . . . Out of a group of 87 students at the Stripp school this winter, 34 have already been placed in organized baseball . . . Six graduates of last year's school are playing in the Class A leagues . . . Stripp, traded to the Cardinals by Brooklyn during the winter, is holding out for a $10,000 salary . . . The Cards offered him a $6,000 contract, Branch Rickey pointing out that he would probably cash in on a World Series split also . . . to which Stripp replied very originally . . . He said "Oh Yeah?"

No Limit on Bets.

Washington bookmakers who flee at the mention of a $10 bet on the races at Havana have hardier brethren here in Orlando . . . The bookies here place no limits on bets at the Havana tracks, declaring that the horses run more true to form in Havana than at any other winter track . . . the dog tracks in Florida outside of Miami are a farce . . . a five-dollar bet will cut the odds on a 40 to 1 shot to 10 to one . . . One-Eyed Connolly cashed a "daily double" at the Orlando track which netted him $200 . . . Then he blew to Miami and greener pastures . . . Anthony Hauck, prosecutor of Bruno Hauptmann, an Orlando visitor, declares that the Lindbergh kidnaper was offered a 20-year sentence if he named his accomplices, if any . . . Hauptmann started to confess, then changed his mind, according to Hauck.

The absence of slot machines in Florida this season has left the Washington rookies with time hanging heavily on their hands . . . the natives have their own form of "numbers" game . . . it's Bolito, a Spanish lottery affair, with drawings made several times a day in the Bolito houses and odds running as high as 1,000 to 1 . . . The most attractive gamble in Florida is Miami's famed Beano game . . . which winds up every evening with a $1,500 pot for the holder of the lucky card . . . Orlando bookies are offering a 3 to 1 against the possibility that both War Admiral and Seabiscuit will win Saturday's rich stake races . . . Tom Smith, Seabiscuit's trainer blames Sonny Workman's unfamiliarity with the mount for the horse's defeat by Anerold . . . which is the first time Workman has ever been accused of a poor ride.

His Big Chance.

No rookie ball player ever had a more glowing opportunity than Thompson Orville Livingston, the Nats' catcher from Chattanooga . . . the door is wide open inasmuch as Rick Ferrell is the only experinecod catcher on the squad and the Nats have been unable to buy or trade for another veteran . . . One reason why ball players like their hits is because the difference between a .275 hitter and a .300 hitter in 400 times at bat is only ten hits . . . Clark Griffith today made a small wager that Mrs. Joe Kuhel and Mrs. Buddy Myer could beat their respective husbands in a team match on the golf links . . . Happy O'Brien, Al Capone's former caddy, declares that the mob leader once tipped him $5,000.

On his last appearance at the plate in the last game of the season, Johnny Mize, Cardinal first baseman, hit a home run at Chicago . . . which was notable only because it was made at Wrigley Field, the only park in the league where Mize had previously failed to make a home run in 1937 . . . In at least one respect, Joe Di Maggio was a flop last season . . . he failed to make as many home runs as the entire Washington ball club, falling one short . . . Di Maggio clouted 46 for the circuit and the 23 players on the Nats' roster beat him out, aggregating 47.

Squawk Justified.

Bill Beard, the rookie catcher from Oregon who was tipped to the Nats by Howard Maple, a former Nat, bears a dubious recommendation . . . because Maple himself was one of the worst catchers ever to wear a Washington uniform . . . George Preston Marshall's squawk that the colleges are raiding the pro football ranks for coaching material is justified in view of the numerous defections from pro ranks . . . but the fault lies with the pro clubs who aren't paying their athletes enough to create any resistance to a half-decent college coaching offer . . . and coaching contracts are iron-clad for one reason at least . . . Sammy Baugh's contract with the St. Louis Cardinals calls for only $3,000, and he received no bonus for signing.

Terps' Late Tally Beats Citadel, 45-43

All Four Seeded Teams Bow in Opener at Raleigh.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Raleigh, N. C., March 3.—Eddie Johnson pulled Maryland's dark horse chances of winning the 1938 Southern Conference basketball title out of the fire and put them onto the ice by putting one in story-book fashion just as the final gun blew to win Maryland's clash with the Citadel here tonight in preliminary pairings of the tourney.

Before Johnson pushed that last tally through, the two teams had battled it out tooth and nail before 5,000 fans assembled in the Raleigh Memorial Cymnasium here.

Maryland started well when George Kenpley, Terp forward, opened the scoring festivities by swishing in the first few minutes in a long midcourt arc which dropped through without touching the hoop.

Terps 5 Points Ahead.

Teammate Coleman Headley netted two more long ones immediately thereafter to give the Terrapins a 5-point margin on the Bulldogs, who had failed to rate anything but a free throw.

Citadel began to wreak vengeance on the Terps. Starting from scratch, Citadel's Wilson, McNeil and Holt began to make a habit practice of putting long ones through. Maryland's zone defense proved of little avail against the long, high arcs which the Bulldogs directed at the basket.

Terps Lead At Half.

Overtaking the Terrapins, Citadel deadlocked the Terps, 20-20, in the closing moments of the first half, but Sport McCarthy, Terp center, sent a long one through just under the wire and the half ended with Maryland ahead, 22-20.

Citadel came back in the second half and began to take the game away from Maryland. Citadel's McNeil and Burrows, ran the score up to 39-29.

The Terps followed the Bulldogs step by step until the score stood tied 42-42 with 25 seconds to play. Dutch Kenpley had netted three in a row and Wheeler and McCarthy had added one apiece to tie the score.

The Bulldogs edged out in front again by the slender margin of one point made by Propst in a free throw. Wheeler tossed in a free one just a few seconds later to tie the score again.

Then in a melee under the Citadel basket, Bulldog and Terp fought for the ball and out of that mass of athletes rose Eddie Johnson to toss the winning score in just as the final gun went off.

Wheeler and Johnson were tied up for the scoring honors with 12 apiece. Opposition scoring was led by Burrows with 11.

W. & L. Quintet Defeats Tarheels.

Raleigh, N. C., March 3 (AP).—Washington and Lee astounded a record opening crowd of 3,000 this afternoon by playing inspired basketball and eliminated top-seeded North Carolina from the Southern Conference basketball tourney, 48 to 33.

Washington and Lee's brilliant victory shocked tourney followers as the Generals, though being the defending champions, had barely nosed into the tourney in eighth place and had lost two regular season games to the White Phantoms.

Dr. John (Dropkick) Murphy earned a half interest in Jesse James' light-heavyweight wrestling title last night at the Arena where they tugged and struggled one hour and a half to a satisfying draw.

It was a good show, as any of the 1,000 fans in the pews will attest, with an entertaining supporting card underneath. Chief Thunderbird took the semi-final, tossing Boris Demitroff after 16 minutes work with a couple of war whoops and a chinlook.

In the other preliminaries, Chief Chewaki threw Bob Miller in six minutes with a body slam; Ram Singh tossed Louis Bacigalupi in 10½ minutes with a headlock, and Jose Rodriguez pinned Carlos Montanez after 17 minutes with a body slam. The bald-headed guy in row three, north section, couldn't find an opponent, and was idle.

The Murphy-James brawl started at a fast clip with both men doing three more laps around the hemp enclosure before settling down to the real task at hand. Murphy had the best of the early going, putting armlocks, necklocks and leglocks on his opponent like a salesman demonstrating a vacuum cleaner.

His tamed combination arm and leg hold, which ends up with the opposition reclining on the carpet like a lost doughnut, left James limp and haggard the first time he used it. His second attempt with it didn't work, and before the evening was over James was trying to

Wes Ferrell Hopes Glasses Will Aid His Pinch-Hitting

Washington Club Will Present Its First Bespectacled Pinch Hitter This Season; Harris Watches Brainard.

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 3.—The Washington ball club which, according to the 40-to-1 odds against it, appears to be a very commonplace team, will be unique in at least one respect. It will present, next season, the first bespectacled pinch hitter in big league history.

The fellow who is attempting the innovation is Wesley Cheek Ferrell, the hard-swinging pitcher who has been on call as a pinch hitter ever since he came up to the big leagues a dozen years ago. Down here in the orange belt where the Nats are training, glasses are being fitted for Ferrell.

The big pitcher feels keenly his lack of success with the bat last season after several years as a batting threat. One of the most feared hitters, not only among pitchers but among all his colleagues in the American League, Ferrell was always drafted for pinch hitting duties with the Cleveland Indians and the Boston Red Sox before joining Washington last summer.

Figures Glasses Will Help.

With the Nats, he had a comparatively poor year at bat, and during recent months he has been experimenting with glasses while reading. He believes the donning of spectacles at bat will restore his hitting eye.

"I was losing the ball as it came up to the plate last season," Ferrell explained. "It seemed to hit a blind spot and I was just guessing up there with a bat in my hand. The glasses have improved my eyes for reading and they ought to help my batting eye.

"Of course, I won't fool with glasses when I'm out there pitching. They wouldn't be any help. But I'm seeing an oculist now about some 'cheaters' that will wipe out that blind spot—I hope."

Dozens of big league ball players have worn glasses as an aid to their batting, but none were, fundamentally, dangerous hitters.

A New Departure.

No truly dangerous hitter has ever before resorted to glasses and never has there been a bespectacled pinch hitter. Thus Ferrell is attempting a new departure in the big leagues.

Several years ago infielder Ossie Bluege attempted to bolster his batting average by donning spectacles at bat, but Bluege's experiment was short-lived. He discovered that the perspiration from his forehead fogged his glasses and that they were a handicap rather than a help. He abandoned the idea within two months.

Out at Tinker Field this morning Manager Harris took his first look at his newest pitching rookie—Bill Brainard, a 6-foot 4-inch right-hander, who won 19 games with Sanford in the Florida State League last year. Harris did not permit himself to enthuse over the "action" of the young giant, who is supposed to own a fast ball.

He did enthuse, though, over one incident that the workout developed. It was a vicious clout delivered by young Jimmy Wasdell in batting practice. The rookie first baseman, whose 197 pounds are an asset when he connects with a ball, but a liability otherwise, caught hold of a pitch and sent it out to the distant rightfield fence on the first hop—a 500-foot smack.

It was the talk of the workout.

Trainer Mike Martin cracked down on the rookie pitchers who were tossing the ball at better than a lob, and shooed them to the outfield for a bit of leg work.

Coach Clyde Milan, who is charged with making an outfielder out of young George Washington Case, has his own technique. He has abandoned the time-honored method of hitting fungoes to the rookie on the theory that it is no trick to catch a fungo hit. He has stationed Case in the outfield during batting practice and forced him to break for every ball hit by the batters.

Buddy Baer Is 5-to-8 Choice In Barlund Fight at New York

By the Associated Press.

New York, Mar. 3.—Buddy Baer, younger and bigger of the fighting California brothers, trades punches with Gunnar Barlund, Finnish champion, in a ten-round bout tomorrow night as heavyweights top Madison Square Garden's boxing card for the third successive week.

Baer, with 35 knockouts in 43 bouts, was a 5-to-8 betting choice.

Promoter Mike Jacobs, whose last two garden shows have been topped by the Joe Louis-Natie Mann and Jimmy Adamick-Harry Thomas matches, may pit the winner of tomorrow night's bout against Louis in May if the heavyweight champion decides on a third tune-up for his June title battle with Max Schmeling.

In his last two starts here, Baer bowled over Abe Simon and Eddie Hogan in three rounds. He predicts he'll require no more time to polish off Barlund.

Barlund was something of a sensation when he first showed here, but an attack of influenza compelled him to go back to Finland for a rest. Since returning last spring, he has knocked out Eddie Coderre and Hans Haverlick and beaten Alberto Lovell, the Argentine.

Most observers agree the fight will end via the knockout route somewhere between the first and seventh rounds. Most of Baer's string of kayoes have been compiled inside of three rounds, but Barlund is a slow starter and usually needs three or four rounds to warm up. After that he throws plenty of leather.

Invaders Bow To Johnnies

Bethesda-Chevy Chase High and St. John's Prep courtmen prepared for a third and decisive battle on Saturday afternoon as each survived the first round of the metropolitan tournament at Tech High last night before a noisy throng of 1,500 student rooters.

Each team compiled an 18-3 lead at halftime over its opponents and only St. John's was extended in the second half. The Johnnies finally won out over Fredericksburg, 31 to 25, while Al Vogt's Bethesda five won as it pleased from the Mount Rainier aggregation, 33 to 15.

So superior were the winning quintets that the losing teams, total points scored in the first quarter was a large zero. The Virginians trailed by a 10-to-0 count as the first period closed, while the Mounts were on the short end of a 9-to-0 whitewash.

But the first game nearly produced one of the biggest upsets of the scholastic season. Coach Gene Augusterfer, of the St. John's five, trusted the 18-to-3 halftime lead to his second and third stringers and it proved to be a bad move as the small but scrappy Fredericksburg five reduced the margin to 25-16 at the third period and then bedlam broke loose.

They pulled it to 27-20 when Augusterfer decided the reserves had had enough. But the regulars were cold and the losers reduced the gap to 27-25 before Jimmy Mulvihill scored the twenty-ninth point with a looping field goal and pulled the game out of the fire.

The comeback of the underdog Virginians was one of the gamest stands seen on the scholastic courts this season, and Mulvihill's basket probably saved the Johnnies from a beating as the inspired team that came from behind had the stands in an uproar as they lacked only a basket of tying the score.

Johnny Swaggart led the scorers with 12 points, one more than Wholey of the losers. Giebel was second with six points for the winners.

The Bethesda five, its zone defense working to perfection, gave easily the most impressive performance of the evening as it routed the Mounts. Only in the third quarter did the Prince George five show any signs of life, outscoring the Montgomery representatives by 8 to 6.

Carl Hayden paced the rangy Bethesda five with three field goals and a quartet of foul shots for 10 points, followed by Leon Vannais and Pete Kimmel with six each. Frank Landlot, who broke the Mounts scoreless streak from the floor with a shot from mid-court near the end of the second quarter, scored six points.

Two more first round contests Are on tap tonight, with Eastern

Glenn Steps Distance in Fast 4:04.4

Former Record Was 4.08.4 Set by Kansas Ace.

By the Associated Press.

Hanover, N. H., March 3.—Mighty Glenn Cunningham ran the fastest mile ever recorded in the world's history tonight when he was clocked in 4:04.4 on Dartmouth's springy 6 2-3 laps modern track. That time was 4 full seconds under the Kansan star's 4:08.4 indoor world record and 2 seconds faster than the outdoor mark of 4:06.4 recently credited to Englands Syd Woodersen by the International Amtaeur Athletic Federation.

Cunningham, who gave handicaps ranging from 5 yards to 260 yards to six Dartmouth runners at the start, was clocked in 58.5 seconds for his first quarter, 2:05.5 for the half-mile and 3:04.2 at the three-quarters mark.

Cunningham gave Stu Whitman, Dartmouth's outstanding miler, a 5-yard start. The Indian miler was a few inches ahead of the Kansas flyer when he dropped out at the half-mile mark.

20 Yards Ahead!

All but one of the other five Dartmouth runners, Cliff Holmes, Bert McMannis, Robert Yeuell, Fred Upton and Hal Wonson, who had 260-yard starts, retired from the handicap race during the last lap, leaving Cunningham running against Wonson, who merely jogged to the three-quarter's mark.

Cunningham's amazing race was timed by Profs. L. F. Murch and Gordon S. Hull, of Dartmouth, and Charles A. Proctor, a Dartmouth alumnus and Hanover resident.

"I thought my time would be about 4:05 because my second quarter was a little slow," Cunningham said after the race. "But I'm not surprised at the time. The track was marvelous and the conditions were ideal."

May Try Feat Again.

Charles Vernon, who serves Cunningham in a managerial capacity, indicated that Glenn was so pleased with his performance here that he was considering the advisibility of making another visit and attempting to improve tonight's epic performance.

Harry Hillman, Dartmouth track coach, who arranged for the special race, was almost overwhelmed by its success.

"There's nothing to say about it," Hillman replied when his opinion was sought. "It was the most remarkable race I have ever seen and Glenn murdered his own world indoor record and was away under the outdoor mark. His performance more than makes good my claim that the Dartmouth track is five seconds faster than any other in the world."

Cunningham Cracks Mark Eight Times.

Glenn Cunningham's world fastest mile in 4:04.4 at Hanover, N. H., was the eighth time the great Kansan bettered 4:10 for the distance, and the eighteenth time in track and field hisory that the 4:10 time had been eclipsed. Here are the records:

Grange Undergoes Operation; Doctor Says He's Better

By the United Press.

Chicago, March 3.—Dr. V. O. Nerger, physician and close friend of Harold (Red) Grange, revealed today he had performed an emergency operation on the one-time galloping ghost of Illinois, which "probably saved his life."

He said the former football star was recovering but would be confined at the hospital at least two weeks.

Grange, three times an All-American halfback at Illinois and ten years a regular with Chicago's professional Bears, was operated on Tuesday night, his physician said, to correct bladder adhesions resulting for an old football injury.

"He has been troubled off and on for two or three years," Dr. Nerger said. "If the condition had been allowed to continue a few days more, it would have been mighty serious."

Baby Manuel Kayoes Burrone in Fourth

In This Corner

By Jack Cuddy.

Copyright, 1938, for The Washington Post.

Tampa, Fla., March 3.—Bill McKechnie, at 50, does a bit of baseball pioneering.

McKechnie sat there on a long, plain pine bench with the afternoon sun flooding down upon his gray-uniformed body. There are no dugouts at Plant Field where the Cincinnati Reds and their new manager, McKechnie, are training. The bench is out in the open, like a football bench.

Perhaps it was the exposed seat or the intense concentration reflected in McKechnie's somewhat peaked face that made me think of him as a pioneer—a chap moving into another great adventure at the half-century mark of his life. Here he was at 50, beginning a new phase of his baseball career, breaking away from Boston where he had managed the Braves and succeeding Bees for the last eight years to seek a new foothold in the Ohio city.

What did McKechnie think of this situation?

"Well, I don't know much about our players yet," he said. "But I've seen enough of their ability to convince me that the Reds will not be last again this season. What do I think about the general set-up at Cincinnati? That's a different story. It looks like the perfect baseball set-up—with an intelligent and wealthy man like Powell Crosley, jr. at the head and with Warren Giles as his first lieutenant. Giles is a very able baseball man."

Fifty Men Train.

You could see the hopes of a gold rush reflected in McKechnie's sharp face—just as it might have been reflected in the countenances of pioneers who had moved Westward in the old days. At last "Wilkinsburg Will" was moving into a baseball enterprise where he would not feel the pinch of poverty from above—where he might have money to spend on players and things, and where he would be certain that there would be no uncertainty over the salaries due his players of himself.

"I've got about 50 men training now," McKechnie said. "At least 12 of them have no chance of remaining with the club. We brought them down to school them so they might develop more quickly for some of our eight farm clubs. That's the story of the Reds of the future—development. We've got to develop players for our farm clubs—men who later can move up into the Cincinnati team. Mr. Crosley already has spent enough money in attempts to resurrect the Reds to be convinced that one cannot buy a pennant-winning club. And he has witnessed the buying attempts of Owner Tom Yawkey, of the Red Sox. Crosley, Giles and myself are sold on the farm system."

Aside from the releases of Kiki Cuyler and Wild Bill Hallahan, the 1938 Reds squad is much the same as that of '37, which was managed by Chuck Dressen and which wound up in last place. A few rookies have been brought in to bolster the club but it's too early to tell anything about them yet, according to Bill.

Faces a Big Job.

McKechnie is tackling the job of boosting Cincinnati out of the baseball doldrums after turning in a sort of "miracle man" performance at Boston in '37. He piloted the Bees into fifth place last season after they had established a new major league record for losing games in '36, when they finished an abysmal last.

McKechnie, who managed the Cardinals and Pirates before shifting to Boston, is no stranger to Cincinnati, where he played as an infielder during part of the 1916 and all of the '17 seasons. But playing there 20 years ago and managing the Cincinnati Club today are vastly different enterprises.

"I was reluctant to leave Boston," Bill admitted, "because the fans and the newspapermen there were my friends and because my wife and I had so many grand associations. But Mr. Crosley and Mr. Giles offered me a fine opportunity with the Reds. Already I am delighted with the attitude of the Cincinnati press and fans. The city is pennant hungry and the newspapermen have been most tolerant of the brand of ball played by the Reds in the past. I hope the club will improve under my management and move into the first division and toward the flag. But that movement must be gradual."

Which may be one reason why Wes is drawing a $15,000 salary and Rick only $10,000 . . . somehow, it's hard to say "only" $10,000 . . . If Ducky Medwick signs with the Cardinals his salary will be in the neighborhood of $20,000 . . . which is what we call a nice neighborhood.

The telegraph companies, you may have noticed always abbreviate Florida by "Fla.", not the traditional "Fla." . . . The reason? . . . because they do not wish to risk confusion with the abbreviation of Alabama which could happen if an operator were a bit careless . . . Alvin Crowder and Elden Auker, past and present Detroit pitchers, are joint owners of a huge orange grove near Lakeland, Fla., home of the Tigers' training camp . . . Crowder also owns a string of beaneries in his native North Carolina . . . The orange market is so low at the present writing that the groans of Florida shippers sound like a battery of fog-horns.

Baltimore, March 3 (AP).—The Maryland Jockey Club named George Brown today as steward at Pimlico for the May 2-14 meeting. He succeeds the veteran Frank J. Bryan who resigned yesterday.

Hialeah Park Feature Won By Maedic

Page Entry Pays $13.40, Beating Tuefel; Six Favorites Bow.

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., March 3.—One of those afternoons that find favorite players mumbling to themselves cropped up here today. Those who go strictly according to past performances tried to recoup their losses on the Wheatley Stable's Teufel in the featured race, but their selection finished third, becoming the sixth straight losing choice.

Dewitt Page's Maedic, well trounced in his last two endeavors, broke loose with one of his best efforts and, under husky Eddie Arcaro, outlasted H. W. Jackson's Proph by a head in the photofinish. Teufel was beaten five lengths for the place. Maedic paid $13.40 and, under 118 pounds, sped the one mile in 1:37 2-5.

Maedic was on the doubtful list of Widener Challenge Cup nominees. He is considered at his best in mud and, under such conditions, might get his chance in the Saturday classic. Teufel is eligible, but a very unlikely starter.

Arcaro Rides Fine Race.

Arcaro rode a heady, powerful race, again showing why he is the top pilot at the meeting. The veteran broke his mount with the leaders and let him take a narrow lead over Proph. It was a two-horse affair all the way, with Arcaro nursing the Page representative along and saving enough for the stretch drive. Proph could not make the leader give up in the exciting run to the wire. Teufel overtook Boston Pal for the show with a spurt through the final quarter mile.

Steepletop put an end to the string of beaten favorites by taking the seventh purse in hollow fashion. The colt, ridden by Irving Anderson, raced along with Be Big and Ritz Brothers in the early running, shook off Ritz Brothers at the top of the stretch and galloped away to score by four lengths at odds of $5.50 for $2. Peedeeque came from far back and beat Chrysmute by two lengths for the runner-up position.

Four of the ten juvenile platers in today's initial event of three furlongs drove down to the wire heads apart. A pair of long shots finished on top. Kate Smith, paying $22.70, earned the purse over Friendly Paul. Roidef was third and Mousie fourth. Kate Smith swerved badly in the early stages, then straightened out and wore down Roidef. The favored Spin On also was a victim of crowding and wound up seventh. The time was 35 1-5 seconds.

Night Intruder Wins.

Closing with a rush on the outside after being outrun most of the 6-furlong trip, the 3-to-1 shot, Night Intruder, drove first home by a length and a half in the second contest. Spindletop headed the heavily backed Singing Slave for second money. Singing Slave and Spindletop waged a suicidal duel for supremacy into the last sixteenth of a mile, where Carroll Bierman brought the winner into prominence and stored going away in 1:13 1-5.

Retlaw, a plater gifted with a high turn of speed, made it two in a row under Bobby Merritt in the 6-furlong third race. As in his last outing, the colt stole a long lead, but "came back" rapidly in the last furlong and was all out to win by a half length. He returned $8.20. Liberty Torch made up a lot of ground to be second by another half length. Didutellus, after a futile fling at the winner, was weakly handled in the final strides and finished third for the talent.

Black River Fails.

Black River handed favorite players their fourth setback in a row when he finished a close third in the 7-furlong test. Eddie Arcaro had the veteran winging out in front, but his mount faltered under 120 pounds. Coulee Dam, a 6-to-1 hazard, arrived home on top by a half length. Old Nassau headed Black River at the wire. Sterling Young kept Coulee Dam hot on the trail of Black River and put up a strong finish to make the grade in 1:25 1-5.

NIGHT INTRUDER, under light restraint in the early running, improved his position steadily while slipping through on the inside rounding the turn, then swung around the leaders in the final furlong, closed gamely and won going away. SPINDLETOP forced the pace all the way and outlasted SINGING SLAVE when the final test came. SINGING SLAVE displayed her usual good speed while saving ground, but faltered through the stretch.

RETLAW opened up a lead on his field at once and increased it rounding the turn for home and was under strong pressure at the finish to hold away. LIBERTY TORCH, off poorly, gradually improved her position on the outside, slipped through on the inside during the stretch drive and outgamed DIDUTELLUS at the finish. The latter, prominent in the early running, weakened in the last 70 yards.

COULEEDAM outbroke the field, followed the leader closely on the outside and, responding with determination to punishment, took command in the last 50 yards to win going away. OLD NASSAU, a forward factor throughout, made a game effort when the final test came and outlasted BLACK RIVER. The latter got going rapidly and set a fast early pace, but faltered when placed to a drive.

HUSKIE BOY, quickest to begin, held his opposition safe for speed and opened up a commanding lead entering the stretch. Faltered steadily through the stretch and was ridden out vigorously to withstand CATALYSIS' challenge. CATALYSIS broke well, but immediately dropped out of contention and was outrun in the first half mile, came around the leaders entering the stretch, gained steadily and was wearing the winner down at the finish. TO THE RESCUE, a trailer until straightened into the stretch, closed a big rush to shake off BRYONIN.

SIXTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,200. The Hollywood Breeders. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:36. Off 4:38. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAEDIC, $13.40, $5.20, $3.40; PROPH, $4.70, $3.20; TEUFEL, $3.30.

MAEDIC, hustled to the front in the run out of the chute, set an even pace while saving ground in the early running and, responding courageously under an energetic hand ride, outlasted PROPH. The latter, on the outside and in close attendance of the leader all the way, made a game bid when called upon, but Arcaro outrode Roberts in the final drive. TEUFEL, steadied back of the leaders until midway around the lower turn, moved up steadily on the stretch turn and shook off BOSTON PAL.

STEEPLETOP, a keen factor and saving ground from the start, opened up a winning lead entering the stretch, but was kept under brisk pressure to the finish. PEEDEEQUE, outrun in the early stages, gradually bettered his position on the outside in the last quarter mile and easily disposed of the others in the stretch run. CHRYSMUTE, well up from the start, held on gamely to hold SHOT UP safe.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 5:40. Off 5:42. Winner, P. J. FOUR SPOT, slow to settle in his stride, closed an immense gap through the stretch.

Navy Retains Hardwick in Coach Berth

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md. March 3.—The Naval Academy prepared for the fall football season today by renaming the 1937 football coaching staff with one addition.

Rear Admiral Wilson Brown, superintendent of the academy, announced that Lieut. Harry J. (Hank) Hardwick, who took over the head coaching duties last year, will continue in that capacity.

The superintendent also announced the appointment of Commander Ward P. Davis to succeed Commander Andrew C. McFall as graduate manager of athletics. Commander McFall, who has been three years at the academy, is due for sea duty in June under Navy routine.

The football coaching staff, headed by Hardwick, consists of John N. Wilson, backfield coach; Keith Molesworth, assistant backfield coach, and Edgar E. (Rip) Miller, line coach. This is the same setup as last year with the exception of Molesworth, former quarterback of the Chicago Bears. He joined the coaching staff Saturday.

In addition to this group of coaches, there will be several junior Naval officers assigned to aid with the varsity, junior varsity and plebe squads. This is in accord with the routine Navy policy.

Spring practice began at the academy on Monday with 85 midshipmen drawing football gear. This group will work for four weeks, when another group will be called out.

5 More Contests For Army Vs. Navy.

Annapolis, Md.—Athletic teams of the Army and Navy will meet in five additional sports on a home-and-home basis under an agreement just concluded between the authorities of the Naval and Military academies, it was announced today.

Swimming, gymnasium, tennis, soccer and golf have been added to the annual competition which has included baseball, basketball, cross-country, football, lacrosse and track. There has been no previous contest between the service rivals in swimming, soccer and golf.

The first meeting under the new arrangement will be the clash between the Army and Navy tennis teams at West Point on May 28. This contest will be held in connection with the scheduled game between the Army and Navy lacrosse teams on the cadet field. While these events are on at West Point the Navy baseball and track teams will meet Army teams here.

Bauer Loses To Hemphill

By the Associated Press.

St. Augustine, Fla., March 3.—For the first time this winter Patty Berg looked on from the sidelines today while a stellar group of women golfing stars fought it out for honors of the annual Florida East Coast championships.

Kathryn Hemphill, Columbia, S. C., defending champion, swept into the semifinal round over Jean Bauer, Providence, R. I., turning in one of the most remarkable cards ever made by a woman on the lengthy St. Augustine course. In defeating Miss Bauer 5 and 4, the Carolina golfer fired a round of 37-35—72, 8 under women's par and the regulation figure for men. She equaled the women's course record.

Miss Hemphill's round was all the more remarkable because of high wind and rain.

She finds as her semifinal opponent tomorrow Mrs. Charles Newbold, Wichita, Kans., who survived today with an extra-hole win over Laddie Irwin, Montclair, N. J.

For the regulation distance, Mrs. Newbold had a medal score of 78, compared with 77 for Miss Irwin.

The other semifinal match brings together Mrs. Jane Cothran Jameson, West Palm Beach, and Marian McDougall, Portland, Oreg. Mrs. Jameson, who conquered Miss Berg in the opening round yesterday, won over Frances Owen, Jacksonville, today, 6 and 5.

Miss McDougall brought an upset when she won, 3 and 1, from Dorothy Traung, San Francisco.

Murphy also used his widely publicized dropkick extensively, but with indifferent success. He almost booted Jesse for a field goal at the 45-minute mark, but the latter held for downs and to the undisguised amazement of the Murphy fans, kicked out of danger from his own goal line.

James did very well with the dropkick, and at the one-hour signal they were jumping up and kicking at one another like a couple of strange kangaroos. But James didn't do all the signal-kidnapping, for the doctor picked up Jesse's rope-bouncing trick and improved a bit on it. Several times he raced back and forth across the ring, throwing himself into and rebounding out of the ropes as if he enjoyed it.

At the 1:40 pole it looked as though the medicine man finally would triumph, but James wriggled out of a rocking-chair hold to safety. At the 1:44 stage James was sitting astride the prostrate form of Murphy, and it looked as if it were surely over, but, no, the dropkicker escaped with magical ease. Then came the whistle.

probably will be on hand to snatch the honor.

The A. A. U. is preparing invitations to dispatch to all eight colleges in the District as well as to their freshmen representatives. Georgetown, Catholic, George Washington, American, Galludet, Wilson Teachers and Southeastern all are on the mailing list and several entries from among their number are expected.

Eligibility rules governing the entry of collegiate and high-school teams state that none may participate until regular seasons have been completed and until a written approval has been received from officials of their institutions. This is done to avoid any interference with spring activities.

The energetic Johnson, determined to make this tournament the greatest of its kind, has left nothing undone to insure a complete success. He has made several noteworthy improvements. The most important of these was the transfer of play from Heurich gym to Roosevelt and Tech, where more people can be accommodated, and which are more accessible.

Another weight class has been added. The new division is an 85-pound class, the smallest ever included in the tournament. With the addition of the group for the real little "fellas," the classes are increased to eight, ranging from the 85-pounders to the unlimited. The newest class is particularly welcome to the various boys' clubs who sponsor many teams of this weight.

Another attractive phase of the tournament is the unusual interest being manifested by the girls who have just completed their greatest campaign. Many outstanding feminine teams have been developed recently and their race is expected to match the boys' for thrills as well as for good, clean sport.

The trophies, which again will be donated by The Washington Post, are going to be bigger and better than ever before. One of these handsome figures, along with A. A. U. gold medals, will be awarded to the winning team and its members in each class.

Again this season, in an effort to speed play as much as possible, the committee has decided to hold opening rounds of the 85, 100, 115 and 130 pound classes at the Washington Boys Club, headquarters of the A. A. U., where weighing-ins also will be held.

The Post Tournament is open to all teams within a radius of 15 miles of the Capitol and many suburban entries are expected. Teams from Rockville, Falls Church and Sandy Spring have already expressed a desire to compete.

2 Knockouts Mark Fights

Three technical knockouts in 20 bouts featured the second round of the Junior Golden Gloves championships at the No. 10 Metropolitan Police Boys' Club last night.

Willie Scaggs, 92-pound Washington Boys Club fighter, accounted for the second knockout of the evening when he won over William Wright, 91 pounds, of the Police Boys Club.

The third kayo of the night came when Arthur Friedrich, Metro Police Boys Club, 102 pounds, defeated Irving Hicks, 102, of the Neighborhood House.

King Boxers Here Tonight

Columbus Faces a Battle at Turner's.

Columbus University's fighting Explorers are to close their 1938 boxing season at Turner's Arena tonight, 8:15 o'clock.

Faced with the necessity either of winning tonight or else acknowledging their first losing season since organization in early 1931, Columbus U. tonight will be on the short end of the odds when it faces King College's undefeated team, of Bristol, Tenn., in a continuance of one of the most colorful boxing rivalries on its schedule.

Twice previously the Explorers have defeated King College and in so doing administered the visitors' two of the three defeats they have suffered since organization. Eager to avenge these setbacks, both by the narrowest possible margin, King College will be ready to send into action tonight the same fighting order that recently crushed the University of Tennessee by 6½ to 1½.

115 pounds—Georgie Marker (C.) vs. Jim Sawyer (K. C.).
126 pounds—Ray Morse (C.) vs. Lewis Summers (K. C.).
135 pounds—Jim Willis (C.) vs. Capt. Bill Wilkinson (K. C.).
145 pounds—Bert Parod (C.) vs. Warren Wilkinson (K. C.).

Yarosz Meets Krieger.

New York, March 3 (AP).—Teddy Yarosz, of Pittsburgh, former middleweight champion, has signed for a 12-round bout with Solly Krieger, of Brooklyn, at the Hippodrome here on March 16.

2 Are Named To Ring Board

Two service men were appointed judges by the District Boxing Commission yesterday, succeeding Charles C. Dunn and Dr. Don S. Knowlton, who resigned. The new officials are Col. Joseph C. Fegan, U. S. M. C., and Lieut. Robert N. McFarlane, U. S. N.

Col. Fegan, now in the Carribean on the joint maneuvers with the President's son, Lieut. Col. James L. Roosevelt, has been a regular ringsider since the legalization of boxing in Washington. He has followed the game over the world for years, and formerly was director of athletics for the Marine Corps. At present he is the commanding officer of the Marine barracks, of this city.

The commission also granted William A. Mulligan, chairman of the A. A. U. boxing committee, a license to judge amateur bouts.

Virginians, Johnnies Fight for Ball

A last-half rally turned the St. John's-Fredericksburg game into a hectic battle last night in the first round of Star's tournament. The Johnnies finally won by a 31-to-25 score after their lead was reduced from 18-3 to 27-25.

Revolta's 138 Paces Field By 2 Strokes

Harry Cooper Second in Links Event at St. Petersburg.

By the Associated Press.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 3.—Duplicating his sub-par performance of the opening round, Johnny Revolta shot another 69 today for a total of 138 to lead the field at the half-way mark of the $3,000 St. Petersburg Open golf tournament.

The former professional golfers association champion from Evanston, Ill., was two strokes in front of Light Horse Harry Copper, of Chicopee, Mass., leading money winner of the winter circuit.

Revolta's total was four better than standard figures for the 6,400-yard Lakewood course. Cooper had identical rounds of 70 for yesterday and today for a total of 140.

Bracketed behind the leaders at 142, as the field turned toward the final 36 holes and the cash pay-off tomorrow, were Bill Heinlein of Indianapolis and Ben Hogan, of Fort Worth, Tex. Heinlein was two under par with a 70 today to add to his 72 of yesterday, while Hogan had reversed that scoring.

Four players trailed in the next position with 143 totals. They were Harold McSpaden, of Winchester, Mass., with 70-73; Byron Nelson, of Reading, Pa., with 72-71; Denny Shute, of Miami, Fla., with 71-72, and Pat Sawyer, of Birmingham, Mich., with 72-71.

'The Finger' Latest Menace To Ring's Top-Notch Hexer

"THE FINGER" HIMSELF.

'Evil Eye' Finkel Has Competition in Business of Putting Glim on Fighters.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

The "Eye" may not have its wicked, winning gleam after Joey Archibald meets Johnny Mirabelli Monday night at the arena. The "Eye," or Ben Finkel, using his legal handle, is in danger of having the "finger" put on him at the ringside, said finger to be supplied by the "Weasel."

The "Weasel's" finger, adding to the complications, is a damaging digit when properly and officially operated, and the "Weasel" will be in Mirabelli's corner offsetting the effect of the "Eye's" magic glimmer during the main bout.

As confusing as it may sound it's true—every word of it. The "Weasel," or Herman Kerbel, a half-pint package of personality, has as much confidence in his mysterious "finger," as Finkel has in his "Eye." Even more. "Ain't I got ten fingers to his two eyes?" he points out.

The Weasel got into Herr Goldie Ahearn's Shirts, Shorts and Socks (and angles) Shop yesterday when somebody left the door ajar. He selected a couple of $2.95 shirts, four $1.50 neckties and a plentiful supply of the firm's best hosiery at the proprietor's expense, nearly driving aforementioned "prop" crazy.

"Lookit," moaned the heavyweight matchmaker, "lookit. I transport him to stop da 'Eye' and already he's driving me bankrupt."

The Weasel gave him a cold stare and put the "finger" on him. "Don't worry," he said, fingering an expensive lounging robe with a longing touch. "Don't worry. You want me to stop that phony (pointing at Finkel, but not with THE finger) and I'll make that 'Eye' of his look like an optical illusion. Lookit this." He clapped hands three times, stomped his left foot twice, and pointed an extremely accusing finger at the Eye.

"Point dat thing another way," cautioned Finkel. I don't like it, and anyway, it ain't perlite!"

"That's a very powerful finger I have," Kerbel said proudly. "Once I went to put the finger on somebody and wasn't careful how I pointed and put the finger on myself. I was in a terrible fix."

"Dis guy does everything," spoke up Proprietor Ahearn, recovering his poise and tongue—all in one motion. "He's an endertamer, that's what, an endertamer. He dances, sings, plays de harmon, harmong; well, he plays the mouth-organ. He should hear him somedimes. He'll stand on his hands, juggle baseball bats, or do anything. And he's gonna stop the 'Eye,' make no mistake about that. He's gonna stop him," and Herr Ahearn emitted a deep, guttural chuckle like the villain about to appropriate Bertha, The Stewing Machine Girl's mortgage-ridden homestead.

"A fake, eh," roared the Weasel in his thin falsetto. "A fake," he repeated, clapping hands, stomping his feet and advancing menacingly toward Finkel. He almost put the finger on him, but Finkel was too quick on the draw and whipped out a pair of green-shaded sun glasses.

Jimmy Lake happened into the place at the juncture and Ahearn almost bent the Weasel's spinal column in two getting him to do a tap dance.

"I got on rubber heels," he protested.

"G'wan, g'wan and do it," Ahearn insisted. "You wanna let me down?" Kerbel broke out in a neat tap number, and Mr. Lake, an old trouper in his own right, joined in. They made a nice duet.

Suddenly a chill gloom settled over the place. It felt like the sun had blown a fuse. Finkel had his eye on the assembly.

"I'll fix that guy," yelled the Weasel, pointing an authoritative finger at Finkel. The "Eye" blinked a couple of times, cringed and fled in terror. That was news—FINKEL FLEES FINGER.

"Incidental," said Ahearn regaining his poise a second time, "This guy's everything you can imagine. He's been in shows, carnivals—he used to hypnotize people—circuses and everything. He even helped the Democrats elect Mr. Roosevelt. He worked so hard Mr. Farley wanted to give him a job.

"Yeah, what a job it was, too," volunteered the Weasel. "Minding a flock of ghost ships somewhere on the James River for $400 a year."

"He's been a salesman," murmured Mr. Ahearn sotto voce, "but, confidently, not a very good one."

The words were no sooner out of his mouth when Mrs. Ahearn appeared on the scene sporting a pretty little lapel watch.

"Isn't it cute?" she asked Goldie.

"It certain'y is," he agreed, "where'd you buy it. She looked at the Weasel, an old friend of the family's, incidentally. "He sold it to me for only $10."

When they revived Herr Ahearn he was mumbling incoherently and extremely weakly.

"Ten dollars," they heard him whisper in an off-tone. "Ten dollars, and they're on sale around the corner this week for $5.95."

Training Camp News

JOE MEDWICK SIGNS.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 3 (AP).—Joe Medwick, National League batting champion, signed a one-year contract with the St. Louis Cardinals today.

Medwick came to terms in a conference with Sam Breadon, owner of the St. Louis Club. Salary figures were not announced.

The Cardinal outfielder, voted the most valuable player in the National League in 1937, is believed to have received $12,500 last season.

Following his signing this morning, Medwick donned a uniform and reported to Manager Frankie Frisch at the Cardinals' training camp here, taking part in the morning workout.

VIRGINIAN LOOKS GOOD.

New Orleans, March 3 (AP).—Johnny Humphries, rookie hurler from Clifton Forge, Va., has a good chance of making the grade with the Indians, it was indicated today when Manager Oscar Vitt assigned the tall blond to his assistant, Johnny Bassler, for special care and instruction.

Bassler, one-time Tiger catcher, also has Bob Feller and Dennis Galehouse under his wing.

The drawling Virginian won 20 and lost only 7 for the New Orleans Pelicans last season—his first year in professional baseball. The records show he walked only 77 men in 236 innings, struck out 180 and finished the season with an earned-run average of 3.01.

CHISOX RAINED OUT.

Pasadena, Calif., March 3 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox were to have opened their spring training campaign today but Manager Jimmy Dykes was doubtful if his conditioning program would be under way before Sunday.

For one thing, Brookside Park was so wet from the heavy rains that the infield might not be usable for three or four days. Uncertain also is the arrival of the main continsent of White Sox who left Chicago Tuesday night.

RAINS HAMPER CUBS.

Avalon, Catalina Island, Calif., March 3 (AP).—Concern that his Chicago Cubs will be far behind their conditioning schedule was expressed by Manager Charley Grimm of the Cubs today. With only a fortnight of drill remaining on the island, Grimm is genuinely worried about forecasts of more rain.

"Had weather ruined us at the start and it looks like it may do it again," Grimm said. "We'll need two solid weeks of sunshine now if we are to leave here in condition for the exhibition game schedule."

BILL DICKEY HURT.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 3 (AP).—Batting Bill Dickey, the champions' No. 1 catcher, became the first casualty of the New York Yankees' spring training season today. He strained his side during batting practice.

Although examination showed no serious injury, he will take it easy for a couple of days.

TIGER ROOKIES GO GOOD.

Baton Rouge, La., March 3 (AP).—A couple of Detroit youngsters, Second Baseman Bill Nowak and Outfielder Charles Oxley, who "graduated" from the New York Baseball School here, have been brought in to practice with the National League champions during spring training.

Nowak played second base in today's practice game on Hank Danning's nine, which lost, 6 to 4, to the "Maneuvers" in an intra-squad game.

TERRY LIKES BAKER.

Baton Rouge, La., March 3 (AP).—Bill Terry, manager of the New York Giants, professed disinterest today in Clyde Castleman, his youthful pitcher.

"Tom Baker looks pretty good and I mighty let him take Castleman's place," Terry said.

Terry warned Castleman yesterday to report immediately but Castleman said at Nashville, Tenn., he had not fully recovered from an operation.

Terry said the doctor told him Castleman was in shape to report.

Don McNeill, Mangin Win In Net Play

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 3.—Don McNeill and Gregory S. Mangin today applied the sort of pressure that differentiates a top-flight tennis player from an also-ran to reach the semi-final round of the Men's National Indoor Singles tennis championship.

McNeill, the Kenyon College student who is seeded No. 2, stood within one shot of losing a marathon first set to Leonard Hartman, pulled that out of the fire and then went on to win in four sets, 12—10, 6—4, 2—6, 6—3.

Mangin, handicapped even further as he dropped the first two sets of his quarter final match with Merritt Cutler, veteran New Yorker, drew on all his reserve and experience and put on a brilliant exhibition of volleying that brought him down in front, 9—11, 3—6, 6—0, 6—2, 6—2.

Joining them in the semifinals were Wayne Sabin, of Hollywood, Calif., who subdued Junior Indoor Champion Joe Fishbach, 6—1, 6—1, 4—6, 6—1, and Frank Bowden, of New York, who blasted his way past Morey Lewis, another Kenyon College boy, 6—0, 6—1, 6—4.

Thus seeded ranks were kept intact and, in tomorrow's matches, Sabin, seeded No. 1, will meet Bowden, No. 4, while McNeill faces Mangin.

Meanwhile only one seeded player, Katharine Winthrop, of Boston, remained in women's singles. Miss Winthrop won at 6—4, 6—2, over Hope Knowles, to justify her No. 3 ranking. But Norma Taubele, No. 2, was outsteadied by little Virginia Hollinger, of Dayton, Ohio, 5—7, 8—6, 7—5; Helen Germaine, victor over top-ranking Helen Pedersen on Tuesday, was upset by Millicent Hirsh, last year's runner-up, 3—6, 7—5, 6—2, and Helen Bernhard, 1937 girls champion, ousted fourth seeded Mrs. Virginia Rice Johnson, of Boston, 6—2, 6—4.

Hitting the Headpin

Jimmy Ryan, bowling for the Administration team at Arcadia, chalked up a fine 420 set and 155 game last night for season's records in the Railroad Retirement Board League. Ryan rolled games of 124, 141 and 155 for the 420 count.

Administration accounted for both game and set highs among the teams, with respective 556 and 1,641 totals.

Margaret Mouse, with a high game of 134, paced the Ladies Federal Bowlers at Arcadia while Bertha Greevy rolled a 336 set for honors.

Agriculture No. 1 rolled high team game of 532 with R. F. C. No. 1 accounting for high team set with 1,546.

Construction's 1,636 set was high in the War Department League at Arcadia, with Statistics high game of 595 topping night's efforts; Banks of Armies 148 game and Prevost, of Constitution, 366 set, were also high.

Woodward & Lothrop's bowling team, paced by Ray Utterback's 381 and Tom Scrivener's 352, held its three game lead on first place in the Department Store League last night by taking a 2-1 decision from the last-place Lamb Seal & Stencil Co. Clayton Brown's 351 was high for the losers.

The Credit Bureau and The Hecht Co. remained in a deadlock for second place as the Bureau team took the odd tilt from Guy-Curran, despite Ralph Judd's 361, while the Hechtmen took a 2-1 decision from Raleigh Haberdasher.

Government-Y Wins.

Flashing a decidedly superior brand of basketball, the Government-Y All-Stars handed a picked team from the Herald-Government League a 49 to 26 walloping last night in the Heurich gym before approximately 500 spectators. Proceeds of the game will be turned over to the hot lunch fund for underprivileged school children.

Home Building Here Exceeds Public Awards

Of $2,625,000 January Total $1,802,000 Is for Private Construction.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Residential construction in the metropolitan area of Washington began 1938 with a good volume which included a substantial margin over public work. H. A. Johns, Washington manager of the Dodge reports division of F. W. Dodge Corporation, finds more than $1,750,000 in the total of January contracts which are to be financed privately.

The total of all Washington construction during the first month of the year was $2,625,000. Of that amount the private contracts accounted for $1,802,000, the remainder, $823,000, being for contracts to be financed from public funds.

In a grouping of all types of residential building, one and two-family houses and multiple-family units, the January contract total reached $1,319,000. Under the heading of nonresidential work, the January contracts totaled $727,000.

Mr. Johns concludes his summary of January activities in the local metropolitan area, which includes the District, Arlington and Fairfax counties in Virginia, and Montgomery and Prince Georges counties in Maryland, by reporting that the heavy engineering type of construction contracts, to be financed from public funds or by the utilities, amounted to $579,000.

Foreign Buying Helps to Push Cotton Higher

New York, March 3. (AP).—Cotton ruled quiet but steady today as foreign and trade buying absorbed limited offerings. May, which had reacted from 9.24 to 9.19, closed at 9.21, with final prices 3 to 5 points net higher.

The market opened 5 to 6 points higher in response to steadiness of Liverpool and on trade and foreign buying. Early offerings were easily absorbed however, and the market held a few points above the previous closing levels during the greater part of the day in dull trading.

Winter Wheat Improvement Lowers Prices

Private Crop Estimates 30 Million Bushels Over Federal Figures.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 3.—Authoritative unofficial estimates that indicated substantial improvement of domestic winter wheat since December 1 did much to pull Chicago wheat values down 1⅛ cents today.

In addition to bearish winter crop estimates, forecasts pointed to likelihood of rain and snow tonight or tomorrow helpful to winter wheat Southwest and West. The crop estimates, which came from two of the country's foremost experts, suggested the probable size of United States 1938 winter wheat production would be 30,000,000 bushels larger than the Government's most recent figures.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures showed only fractional rallies, and were ⅛ to ⅞ under yesterday's finish. May, 92⅜ to 92⅛; July, 87⅝ to 87½; with corn unchanged to ⅛ lower, May, 59¼ to 59⅜; July, 60¾; oats, ⅛ to ⅜ off; rye, ⅛ to ½ down, and provisions unchanged to 5 cents setback.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively.
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Work Lower as Trading Continues Slack; U. S. Bonds Firm; Wheat Declines.

New York, March 3.—Financial markets were steady to weak. United States Government bonds hardened after early hesitation. Commodities were dull. Stocks lost more ground in slack dealings, but the market showed no great enthusiasm as a seller. May wheat ended a quarter of a cent lower at 92⅞ cents a bushel. Dollars were unchanged to lower among the foreign exchanges.

Stock prices were lower at the opening and during the day the market grew weaker, with only momentary rallies. All sections of the dealings were affected. The worst was seen in the forenoon, when declines amounted to a point or more in the principal stocks. Closing prices were about half way between the best and the worst.

Exceptions to the decline were few. Borg Warner rose nearly 2 points and then sagged a bit. Bulova Watch climbed a point to a new high price. Inland Steel, duPont and St. Joseph Lead were able to make small gains. Douglas Aircraft recovered an early loss of a point. U. S. Rubber dropped nearly 2 points and then hardened slightly. The preferred performed in an erratic manner. It opened 1½ points higher, fell 2½ points and then recovered to its previous closing level. Rubber preferred's spread of more than 30 points between the highest and the lowest price this year is one of the widest in the list. Case, Columbian Carbon, Howe Sound softened 2 points or more.

Outside Market.

While trading in stocks on the exchanges drags, the outside market in listed stocks comes to the rescue from time to time. Sale of a block of 28,800 shares of Union Carbide over the counter was announced today. Other blocks of stock are being peddled round, and in the past month a considerable number of such sales has been made. While the placing of large blocks of stock off the record probably helps to sustain the price as sent over the ticker, the ultimate effect is much the same. If trading restrictions are to grow more numerous, it might well be that the stock exchange will develop into a small traders' and poor man's market, leaving the big business to the counter dealers, as always has been the case with United States Government bonds.

Through the gloom of the actual condition of business a ray of light penetrates. That comes from the apparent willingness of many corporations to proceed to improve their facilities and to expand their business once an opportunity is given them for securing new capital. In the past month or so a number of important corporations have announced plans for capital expansion "at some future time." The key lies partly in an all-round upturn in business and partly in legislative steps to reopen the capital market. Chief among those steps should be the repeal of the undistributed profits tax. Congress and the President could do a number of other things to thaw out the capital market, and that in turn would do much to start a recovery in general business.

U. S. Rubber.

Proposals of United States Rubber for a new capital setup which would involve retirement of a bond issue (by the sale of new bonds) that restricts dividend action, the consolidation of the rubber plantations with the parent company, and the writing off by $57,862,000 of goodwill, had been forecast. The company's profits for last year turned out to be fully up to predictions. Including the rubber plantations profits, the amount shown for the common shares was approximately $4.10 a share. In planning a new bond issue to supplant the bonds now outstanding, and in reducing common and preferred stock, the company is preparing the way for resumption of dividends upon the common shares. Moreover, by writing down goodwill, the reduction in the depreciation item presumably will add to the amount shown for common shares. On the whole the proposed changes materially should strengthen the position of United States Rubber common.

Precedent.

The United States Rubber plan for cutting goodwill heavily probably will have many imitators in the coming year. The first big operation of the sort in recent years was that announced by Unittd States Steel, in connection with its contemplated new bond issue. Goodwill is often the most valuable earning asset of a corporation, but depreciation charges for tax savings are a matter of agreement with the Government. Reduction of goodwill in corporation balance sheets is a usual procedure in depression periods.

Eastern Air Lines.

The price agreed upon for Eastern Air Lines is attractive from the buyers' angle and, by the same token, it may not be to the liking of some North American Aviation stockholders. At the current market price for North American stock, the assets of the company and its going concern value, are placed at approximately $30,000,000. By the proposed deal North American would give up the air lines for $3,500,000 and have that much cash for expanding its manufacturing capacity. The manufacturing plant is thus given a value of $26,500,000. It will be interesting to observe what price the market places on the stock selling "ex Air Lines."

Curb Exchange.

Price movements on the Curb Exchange continued narrow, with the trend irregularly lower. Sales volume held around the recent low level. About a dozen issues, mostly inactive, fell abruptly on light offerings. Atlanta, Birmingham & Coast Railroad preferred lost more than 7 points on its initial appearance this year. Fire Association of Philadelphia dropped more than 4 points to a new low price on sales involving less than 100 shares. Midland Oil preferred, which attracted attention last week by doubling in market price on a few sales, gave up 3 points on one sale. Mead Johnson, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Newmont Mining, New Jersey Zinc, Aluminum and Creole Petroleum declined.

Rickenbacker Plans To Buy Eastern Air

J. H. Kindelberger, president of the North American Aviation, Inc., said that stockholders would vote in the near future on whether to sell Eastern Air Lines, a subsidiary, to E. V. Rickenbacker and associates, the Associated Press said yesterday. Negotiations for the sale have been progressing "very nicely," Kindelberger said.

He said that the sale, if given stockholder approval, would be for "approximately $3,500,000," and that North American would probably use the proceeds to expand operations. Smith, Barney & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. transaction.

Business Loans In Bank Assets Top U. S. Bonds

By the Associated Press.

J. F. T. O'Connor, comptroller of the currency, reported to President Roosevelt yesterday that national banks had more of their assets in commercial loans than in Government bonds. O'Connor said he regarded as a healthy sign figures from the bank call of December 31 showing that national banks had a total of $30,124,195,000, of which $8,809,448,000 was in loans and discounts and $8,072,882,000 in Federal obligations. The comptroller said this would "surprise most people" as the majority thinks the reverse to be true.

He added that in the last three bank calls commercial loans showed increases and while holdings of Governments went down, and said "that is what everybody in the country wants."

O'Connor, who has resigned to run for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in California, said he would return to that State for one more visit before closing his office here. Asked how he found political situations there on a recent trip, he replied: "I am quite happy about it."

Exchange Governors Approve New System

New York, March 3. (AP).—The governing committee of the New York Stock Exchange today approved a series of amendments to the exchange's constitution designed to reorganize administrative machinery, and submitted the amendments to the membership for vote.

For the next two weeks the membership will ballot on the amendments, one of which calls for a paid president of the exchange, and, if they meet with members' approval, the most radical reorganization of the exchange's administrative set-up in its history is due.

Annuities Are Ruled Not Exempt From Tax

By the Associated Press.

The United States Board of Tax Appeals has ruled that annuity contracts are not entitled to the tax exemptions given to life insurance. In effect, the board held that annuity contracts are investments.

Deciding the question for the first time, the board held that $40,000 paid heirs after the death of Everett Morse, of Boston, under an annuity contract was subject to Federal estate taxes.

Unemployed Up 1,427,000 To 10,342,000

Increase Since September Is Estimated at 4,277,000.

New York, March 3.—Between December and January a further increase of 1,427,000 in the number of unemployed workers brought the total unemployed to 10,342,000, according to the latest estimates of the National Industrial Conference Board. Included in this total of unemployed are 2,344,000 workers attached to the Government emergency labor force, represented by the WPA and the CCC.

The conference board's estimates show an unemployment increase of approximately 4,277,000 since last September. Declining employment in all branches of economic activity has contributed to this increase. In manufacturing there were 1,893,000 fewer workers in January than in September. Transportation showed a decline of 185,000 workers; construction, 229,000, and agriculture, 1,356,000.

The largest declines in employment between December and January were in manufacturing and trade, distribution and finance. The former showed a decrease in employment of 626,000 workers, the latter a decrease of 553,000 workers.

Taking into account the increase in population, the Conference Board estimates that the total labor force of the country, including both employed and unemployed workers, has been increased by the addition of 5,052,000 persons since 1929 to a total of 53,340,000. It is also estimated that there were in January a total of 42,998,000 employed workers.

R. O. Melton, 'Almost Killed' In '89, Expires

D. C. Policeman Survived Blow and Lived to Be Nearly 90.

Richard Oakley Melton described in an 1889 newspaper headline as "almost killed," died yesterday in his home at 4105 Twenty-first street northeast.

He was, in his ninetieth year, the oldest retired Metropolitan policeman, and, though the infirmities attendant upon one of his advanced age had been overtaking him gradually in the last three years, he had been more or less active until six weeks before his death.

Tried to Arrest Man.

What "almost killed" Mr. Melton was a baseball bat swung against his skull by a husky colored man whom he was attempting to arrest for disturbing the peace and quiet of a south Washington neighborhood known as Maiden lane. From the newspaper account it appears the suspect was being goaded into a demonstration of brawn and courage by two women companions who had been assisting him in disturbing the peace.

In any event, the blow was a terrific one, calculated to kill a man less hardy than the type of citizen hired by the District to patrol a beat in the old Fourth Precinct. As it was, the then rookie Private Melton remained unconscious for several days and later, because the blow had virtually lost to him the sight of one eye, was given an "inside" job as license inspector in the District Building.

Private Melton joined the force in 1871 and the clipping describing the incident with the ball bat remained to the end his most prized possession, for it proved, as he often told his friends, that we "came pretty tough in those days."

An Officer 48 Years.

Private Melton remained with the department for 48 year. In that time he earned the distinction of being the first Metropolitan policeman to reach the Sixth Street Station when President Garfield was shot. Also, a member of his family recalled last night, he turned in the first alarm in the old Patent Office fire.

As evidence of the difficulties of policing in the years before 1900, Private Melton used to recount instances when it would be necessary to hawl a fighting drunk two miles to the station house.

"We didn't even have horse patrols in those days," he said. "We just took ahold and marched them off."

Private Melton was born in St. Marys County, Md., December 12, 1848. Too young for Civil War service, he was the first man to join the force after '65 who had not been a soldier.

5 Daughters Survive.

He was a member of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, the Association of Retired Policemen and the Holy Name Society. A nephew by marriage is Detective Sergt. Joseph A. Conner, while his son-in-law, Franklin Monroe, recently retired with the rank of sergeant from the Harbor Police detail.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

The methods by which an expert player locates key cards are difficult to express in cold type. He gains his information in subtle fashion from the plays the defenders do and do not make, also of course from the bidding which did or did not take place. Consider the declarer's play in the following hand:

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.
Match-point duplicate.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

South's first response of two clubs was obviously an unorthodox bid, but it had considerable merit. South was much the better player of the partnership. His own distribution strongly suggested notrump play but he was too strong for one notrump and much too weak for two notrump. His two club, therefore, was a compromise by which he hoped to become the declarer at notrump if North made an encouraging bid over the two clubs.

West opened the deuce of diamonds. Declarer, hoping to win with his own eight-spot, played low from dummy, but East's nine forced the king. The heart queen was led and lost to East's king. East returned the diamond jack. West, having no entry, ducked, in the hope that East would later put him on lead with a third diamond. Dummy's queen won, and the spade ace was knocked out, East returning a spade. Dummy's spades were cashed, and declarer then returned to his own hand with the nine of hearts, after which he cashed the jack.

Now, with only four cards left (declarer's were one diamond and three clubs, dummy's were one heart, one diamond and two clubs), declarer led the queen of clubs. When West did not cover, declarer, after some thought, decided that the entire course of play, including East's persistent refusal to lead a club, had strongly suggested that the club king was in East's hand. Therefore, since a finesse at this point, if it lost, would involve being thrown back in the dummy from which a diamond would finally have to be conceded, declarer went right up with dummy's club ace, cashed the last heart and returned the club. East took his king, but had to present declarer with the club jack for an important overtrick.

Bob Burns Says—

National armament is a whole lot like givin' a kid a bean shooter. It's all right if he plays with it in his own backyard—but pretty soon, he gits to wonderin' how much further his beanshooter'll shoot than the kid's next door. Some of these aggressive countries could take a lesson from Aunt Boo.

One day Uncle Unie says "You know, Boo, we been married a long time and I think it's about time we was findin' out which one is boss around here!" Aunt Boo says "Well, Unie, you'll be a lot happier if you don't try to find out!"

U. S. Aide Fears Beauty Dead on Vessel Is Wife

Off for Norfolk to Identify Mysterious Woman Passenger.

A beautiful auburn-haired woman, found dead in her cabin on the steamer Northland when it docked in Norfolk yesterday, last night was believed to be Mrs. Violet Knight, 36-year-old fashionable Shoreham Hotel milliner.

Her husband, Drexel Knight, research worker with the Agriculture Adjustment Administration, had reported her missing.

After penning a note, which she hid in a prayer book, Mrs. Knight left her home in the Park Central Apartments some time Wednesday night. Knight discovered that his wife called the Norfolk & Washington Steamship Co.'s offices here on Tuesday and inquired about passage.

Body Found by Maid.

The body of the woman believed to be Mrs. Knight was found by a maid.

Dr. C. D. J. MacDonald, Norfolk coroner, was investigating the death last night.

In the victim's purse was found a small sum of money. There also was a letter addressed to "Miss Mary North, Norfolk, Va."

Passengers on the Northland reported they had seen the woman, a light cloak wrapped about her shoulders, pace the deck of the vessel as it slid down the Potomac toward Chesapeake Bay early in the evening. Later she appeared in the salons.

A watchman on duty asserted he found her lying in a corridor just outside her door at 1:15 a. m. She was revived.

"I feel quite all right now," she said, and returned to her quarters.

Knight found the note in the prayer book Wednesday when he returned from his offices. It was addressed to his step-son, Mrs. Knight's 12-year-old boy, Robert.

"I have nothing against anyone. My nerves just snapped," wrote Mrs. Knight. "Mama has gone out for a while."

Description Tallies.

Meanwhile the body lay in the Norfolk Morgue. When Knight heard that a woman had been found dead on the boat, he got in touch with Norfolk authorities, and later phoned Dr. MacDonald.

The victim answers the description of his wife in almost every respect, he said last night, just before leaving for Norfolk.

He said he thought she had become depressed and decided to go on a vacation in Norfolk. She had friends near there, whose names he did not recall.

"I'm convinced her heart went back on her," he added. "She had been losing weight and her heart was bad."

100 Ancient Cars Start Last Trek Here Tomorrow

Dramatizing the Civic Committee's campaign to rid Washington streets of unsafe automobiles, more than 100 jalopies will snort off on their last journey at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow.

The venerable vehicles will start from Washington circle and follow Pennsylvania avenue east to Fourth street, Constitution avenue east to Third street, Third street north to New York avenue and New York avenue east to West Virginia avenue.

Most of the ancient machines, which are to be burned near New York and West Virginia avenues Monday night, are expected to move under their own power tomorrow, but arrangements have been made to tow several of the derelicts.

Led by an escort of motorcycle police, tomorrow's procession also will include approximately 200 used cars of recent vintage, driven by District auto dealers. Maj. Ernest Brown and George Keneipp, manager of the Keystone Automobile club, will lead the motorcade.
